

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA

ARCHÆOLOGICAL SURVEY OF INDIA

ARCHÆOLOGICAL LIBRARY

---

ACCESSION NO. 13376

CALL No. 937.06/Gib

D.G.A. 79

112
~~10024~~

THE HISTORY
OF THE DECLINE AND FALL
OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE.

13376

BY EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

IN TWELVE VOLUMES.

VOL. XII.

A NEW EDITION.

EDINBURGH:

PRINTED FOR HILL AND LEADBURY, PRYSE HILL, GLASGOW HOUSE AND A. STIRLING, AND JOHN OGILBY.

1811.

937:06
Gib

CENTRAL ARCHAEOLOGICAL LIBRARY, NEW DELHI.

Acc. No. .... 13376. ....

Date ..... 24.6.1960. ....

Call No. .... 937. 06. .... (12).

Gilt

CONTENTS

TWELFTH VOLUME.

CHAP. LXV.

Elevation of Timour or Tamerlane to the throne of Samarcand.—His conquests in Persia, Georgia, Tartary, Russia, India, Syria, and Anatolia.—His Turkish war.—Defeat and captivity of Bajazet.—Death of Timour.—Civil wars of the sons of Bajazet.—Restoration of the Turkish monarchy by Mahomet the first.—Siege of Constantinople by Amurath the second.

A. D.		Page
	HISTORIES OF TIMOUR, OR TAMERLANE,
1361-1370.	His first adventures,	1
1370	He ascends the throne of Zagatai,	4
1370-1400.	His conquests,	7
1380-1393.	I. Of Persia,	ib.
1370-1383.	II. Of Turkistan,	ib.
1370-1390.	Of Kipzak, Russia, &c.	9
1398, 1401.	III. Of Hindostan,	10
1400	His war against Solian Bajazet,	13
	Timour invades Syria,	16
	Sacks Aleppo,	20
1401	Damascus,	21
	And Bagdad,	23
1402	Invades Anatolia,	24
	Battle of Angora,	25
	Defeat and captivity of Bajazet,	26
	The story of his iron cage displayed by the Persian historian of Timour,	28

A. D.	Page
Attested, 1. by the French,	32
———, 2. by the Italians,	33
———, 3. by the Arabs,	34
———, 4. by the Greeks,	35
———, 5. by the Turks,	ib.
Probable conclusion,	ib.
1403 Death of Bajazet,	36
Term of the conquests of Timour,	ib.
1404, 1405. His triumph at Samarcand,	40
1405 His death on the road to China,	42
Character and merits of Timour,	ib.
1403-1421. Civil wars of the sons of Bajazet,	47
1. Mintapha,	ib.
2. Isa,	48
1403-1410. 3. Soliman,	49
1410 4. Mouza,	ib.
1413-1421. 5. Malikmet I,	50
1421-1431. Reign of Amurath II,	51
1421 Re-union of the Ottoman empire,	ib.
1403-1425. State of the Greek empire,	53
1422 Siege of Constantinople by Amurath II,	56
1425-1448. The emperor John Palæologus II,	57
Hereditary succession and merit of the Ottomans,	ib.
Education and discipline of the Turks,	58
Invention and use of gunpowder,	62

CHAP. LXVI.

Application of the Eastern emperors to the popes.—Flight to the West, of John the first, Manuel, and John the second, Palæologus.—Union of the Greek and Latin churches, promoted by the council of Basil, and concluded at Ferrara and Florence.—State of literature at Constantinople.—Its revival in Italy by the Greek fugitives.—Curiosity and emulation of the Latins.

A. D.	Page
1339 Embassy of the younger Andronicus to pope Benedict XII,	63

CONTENTS.

D.	Page
The arguments for a crusade and union,	66
1348 Negotiation of Cantacuzene with Clement VI,	69
1355 Treaty of John Palæologus I. with Innocent VI,	72
1369 Visit of John Palæologus to Urban V. at Rome,	74
1370 His return to Constantinople,	77
Visit of the emperor Manuel,	ib.
1400 To the court of France,	78
Of England,	80
1403 His return to Greece,	81
Greek knowledge and descriptions,	ib.
Of Germany,	82
Of France,	83
Of England,	84
1402-1417. Indifference of Manuel towards the Latins,	86
1417-1423. His negotiations,	87
His private motives,	88
His death,	89
1425-1437. Zeal of John Palæologus II.,	90
Corruption of the Latin church,	91
1377-1429. Schism,	92
1409. Council of Pisa,	ib.
1414-1418. Of Constance,	ib.
1431-1443. Of Basil,	93
Their opposition to Eugenius IV.,	ib.
1434-1437. Negotiations with the Greeks,	94
1437 John Palæologus embarks in the pope's galley,	95
1438 His triumphal entry at Venice,	100
into Ferrara,	101
1438-1439. Council of the Greeks and Latins at Ferrara and Florence,	103
Negotiations with the Greeks,	106
1438 Eugenius deposed at Basil,	111
Re-union of the Greeks at Florence,	ib.
1440 Their return to Constantinople,	113
1449 Final peace of the church,	114
1300-1453. State of the Greek language at Constantinople,	ib.
Comparison of the Greeks and Latins,	116
Revival of the Greek learning in Italy,	119
1339 Lessons of Beckham,	120

A. D.	Page
1340-1374. Studies of Petrarch,	121
1350 Of Boccaccio,	123
1360-1363. Leo Pilatus, first Greek professor at Florence, and in the West,	124
1390-1413. Foundation of the Greek language in Italy by Manuel Chrysoloras,	126
1400-1500. The Greeks in Italy,	128
Cardinal Bessarion, &c.	129
Their faults and merits,	130
The Platonic philosophy,	132
Emulation and progress of the Latins,	134
1447-1455. Nicholas V,	ib.
1425-1492. Cosmo and Lorenzo of Medicis,	135
Use and abuse of ancient learning,	136

CHAP. LXVII.

Schism of the Greeks and Latins.—Reign and character of Amurath the second.—Crusade of Ladislaus, king of Hungary.—His defeat and death.—John Huniades.—Scanderbeg.—Constantine Palaeologus, last emperor of the East.

A. D.	Page
Comparison of Rome and Constantinople,	141
1440-1445. The Greek schism after the council of Florence,	145
Zeal of the Orientals and Russians,	148
1431-1457. Reign and character of Amurath II,	150
1442-1444. His double abdication,	152
1443 Eugenia forms a league against the Turks,	154
Ladislaus, king of Poland and Hungary, marches against them,	157
The Turkish peace,	158
1444 Violation of the peace,	ib.
Battle of Warna,	161
Death of Ladislaus,	163
The cardinal Julian,	164
John Corvinus Huniades,	165
1456 His defence of Belgrade, and death,	167

A. D.	Page
1404-1413. Birth and education of Scanderbeg, prince of Albania, - - -	168
1443 His revolt from the Turks, - - -	171
His valour, - - -	172
1467 And death, - - -	174
1448-1453. Constantine, the last of the Roman or Greek emperors, - - -	175
1450-1453. Embassies of Phrasar, - - -	177
State of the Byzantine court, - - -	180

CHAP. LXVIII.

Reign and character of Mahomet the second.—Siege, assault, and final conquest of Constantinople by the Turks.—Death of Constantine Palæologus.—Servitude of the Greeks.—Extinction of the Roman empire in the East.—Consternation of Europe.—Conquests and death of Mahomet the Second.

A. D.	Page
Character of Mahomet II, - - -	182
1451-1481. His reign, - - -	184
1451 Hostile intentions of Mahomet, - - -	187
1452 He builds a fortress on the Bosphorus, - - -	191
The Turkish war, - - -	193
1452, 1453. Preparations for the siege of Constantinople, - - -	194
The great cannon of Mahomet, - - -	197
1453 Mahomet II forms the siege of Constantinople, - - -	200
Fortress of the Turks, - - -	202
Greeks, - - -	203
1452 False union of the two churches, - - -	205
Obstacy and fanaticism of the Greeks, - - -	206
1453 Siege of Constantinople by Mahomet II, - - -	209
Attack and defence, - - -	212
Relief and victory of four ships, - - -	214
Mahomet transports his army over land, - - -	219
Distress of the city, - - -	221
Preparations of the Turks for the general assault, - - -	222
Last farewell of the emperor and the Greeks, - - -	224
The general assault, - - -	226

A. D.		Page
	Death of the emperor Constantine Palæologus,	231
	Loss of the city and empire, - -	ib.
	The Turks enter and pillage Constantinople,	232
	Captivity of the Greeks, - -	233
	Amount of the spoil, - -	236
	Mahomet II visits the city, St. Sophia, the palace, &c. - -	239
	His behaviour to the Greeks, - -	241
	He repeoples and rebuilds Constantinople;	243
	Extinction of the imperial families of Comnenus and Palæologus, - - -	246
1400	Loss of the Morea, - -	248
1461	— of Trebizond, - -	249
1453	Grief and terror of Europe, - -	251
1481	Death of Mahomet II, - -	254

CHAP. LXIX.

*State of Rome from the twelfth century.—Temporal dominion of the popes.—Scandals of the city.—Political history of Arnold of Brescia.—Restoration of the republic.—The senators.—Pride of the Romans.—Their wars.
—They are deprived of the election and presence of the popes, who retire to Avignon.—The jubilee.—Noble families of Rome.—Fate of the Colonna and Ursini.*

A. D.		Page
1150-1300.	State and revolutions of Rome, - -	256
800-1100.	The French and German emperors of Rome, - - -	258
	Authority of the popes in Rome, - -	260
	From affection, - - -	ib.
	— right, - - -	261
	— virtue, - - -	ib.
	— benefits, - - -	262
	Inconstancy of superstition, - -	263
	Seditions of Rome against the popes, - -	264
1050-1103.	Successors of Gregory VII, - -	266
1059-1118.	Paschal II, - - -	267
1118-1119.	Gelasius II, - - -	ib.
1144, 1145.	Lucius II, - - -	269

A. D.	Page
1181-1186. Lucius III.	269
1119-1124. Calistus II.	ib.
1130-1143. Innocent II.	ib.
Character of the Romans by St. Bernard,	370
1140 Political heresy of Arnold of Brescia,	371
1144-1154. He exhorts the Romans to restore the republic,	274
1153 His execution,	376
1144 Restoration of the senate,	277
The capitol,	280
The curia,	281
The prefect of the city,	282
Number and choice of the senate,	283
The office of senator,	283
1252-1258. Brancaccio,	286
1265-1278. Charles of Anjou,	288
1281 Pope Martin IV.	289
1328 The emperor Lewis of Bavaria,	ib.
Addresses of Rome to the emperors,	290
1144 Conrad III.	ib.
1153 Frederic I.	291
Wars of the Romans against the neighbouring cities,	296
1167 Battle of Tusculum,	298
1234 ——— of Viterbo,	299
The election of the popes,	ib.
1179 Right of the cardinals established by Alexander III,	300
1274 Institution of the conclave by Gregory X.	301
Absence of the popes from Rome,	304
1294-1303. Boniface VIII.	303
1309 Translation of the holy see to Avignon,	307
1300 Institution of the jubilee, or holy year,	310
1350 The second jubilee,	312
The nobles or barons of Rome,	313
Family of Leo the Jew,	315
The Colonna,	316
And Urani,	320
Their hereditary fiefs,	322

CHAP. LXX.

Character and coronation of Petrarch.—Restoration of the freedom and government of Rome by the tribune Rienzi.—His virtues and vices, his expulsion and death.—Return of the popes from Avignon.—Great schism of the West.—Re-union of the Latin church.—Last struggles of Roman liberty.—Statutes of Rome.—Final settlement of the ecclesiastical state.

A. D.	Page
1304-1374. Petrarch,	324
1341 His poetic coronation at Rome,	328
Birth, character, and patriotic designs of Rienzi,	331
1347 He assumes the government of Rome,	334
With the title and office of tribune,	336
Laws of the good estate,	ib.
Freedom and prosperity of the Roman republic,	339
The tribune is respected in Italy, &c.	342
And celebrated by Petrarch,	343
His vices and fall,	344
The pomp of his knight-hood,	346
And coronation,	348
Fear and hatred of the nobles of Rome,	349
They oppose Rienzi in arms,	351
Defeat and death of the Colonna,	352
Fall and flight of the tribune Rienzi,	354
1347-1354. Revolutions of Rome,	355
Adventures of Rienzi,	357
1354 A prisoner at Avignon,	358
1354 Rienzi, senator of Rome,	359
His death,	362
1353 Petrarch invites and upbraids the emperor Charles IV, ib.
He solicits the popes of Avignon to fix their residence at Rome,	363
1367-1370. Return of Urban V.	365
1370 Final return of Gregory XI,	ib.
1378 His death,	367
Election of Urban VI,	368

CONTENTS.

xi

A. D.	Page
Election of Clement VII,	305
1378-1419. Great schism of the West,	371
Calamities of Rome,	ib.
1393-1407. Negotiations for peace and union,	372
1409 Council of Pisa,	375
1414-1418. Council of Constance,	ib.
Election of Martin V,	377
1417 Martin V,	378
1431 Eugenius IV,	ib.
1447 Nicholas V,	ib.
1454 Last revolt of Rome,	ib.
1452 Last coronation of a German emperor, Frederic III,	379
The statutes and government of Rome,	380
1453 Conspiracy of Pizzaro,	383
Last disorders of the nobles of Rome,	385
1500 The popes acquire the absolute dominion of Rome,	387
The ecclesiastical government,	391
1585-1590. Sixtus V,	393

CHAP. LXXI.

*Prospect of the ruins of Rome in the fifteenth century.—
Four causes of decay and destruction.—Remains of the Coliseum.—Renovation of the city.—Conclusion of the whole work.*

A. D.	Page
1430 View and discourse of Poggini from the Capitoline hill,	393
His description of the ruins,	397
Gradual decay of Rome,	398
Four causes of destruction,	400
I. The injuries of nature,	ib.
Hurricanes and earthquakes,	401
Fires,	ib.
Inundations,	403
II. The hostile attacks of the Barbarians and Christians,	405

A. D.		Page
	III. The use and abuse of the materials,	408
	IV. The domestic quarrels of the Romans,	410
	The coliseum or amphitheatre of Titus,	410
	Games of Rome, - -	420
1332	A bull feast in the coliseum, - -	421
	Injuries, - - -	423
	And consecration of the coliseum, -	425
	Ignorance and barbarism of the Romans,	ib.
1470	Retraction and ornaments of the city,	429
	Final conclusion, - -	431

OF THE DECLINE AND FALL
OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE.

CHAP. LXV.

Elevation of Timour, or Tamerlane, to the throne of Samarcand.—His conquests in Persia, Georgia, Tartary, Russia, India, Syria, and Anatolia.—His Turkish war.—Defeat and captivity of Bajazet.—Death of Timour.—Civil war of the sons of Bajazet.—Restoration of the Turkish monarchy by Mahomet the first.—Siege of Constantinople by Amurath the second.

THE conquest and monarchy of the world was the first object of the ambition of Timour. To live in the memory and esteem of future ages was the second wish of his magnanimous spirit. All the civil and military transactions of his reign were diligently recorded in the jour-

CHAP.
LXV.

History
of Timour, or Tamer-
lane.

CHAP.
LXV.

nals of his secretaries :<sup>a</sup> the authentic narrative was revised by the persons best informed of each particular transaction ; and it is believed in the empire and family of Timour, that the monarch himself composed the commemorial<sup>b</sup> of his life, and the institutions<sup>c</sup> of his government.<sup>d</sup> But these cares were ineffectual for the preservation of his fame, and these precious memorials in the Mogul or Persian language were concealed from the world, or at least from the knowledge of Eu-

<sup>a</sup> These journals were communicated to Shereffudin, or Sherah-ud-din Ali, a son of Yezd, who composed in the Persian language a history of Timour Beg, which has been translated into French by M. Petit de la Croix (Paris, 1771, in 4 vols. 8mo), and has always been my faithful guide. His geography and chronology are wonderfully accurate; and he may be trusted for public facts, though he severely praises the virtues and actions of the hero. Timour's attention to procure intelligence from his own and foreign countries may be seen in the Institutions, p. 215, 217, 249, 251.

<sup>b</sup> These commemorials are not unknown in Europe; but Mr. White gives some hope that they may be imported and translated by his friend Major Dary, who had read in the East this "immense and faithful" narrative of an interesting and eventful period.

<sup>c</sup> I am ignorant whether the original institution, in the Turkish or Mogul language, be still extant. The Persian version, with an English translation and a most valuable index, was published Oxford, 1754, in 4to by the joint labours of Major Dary, and Mr. Wright, the Arabic professor. This work has been since translated from the Persian into French (Paris, 1757) by M. Langhe, a learned Orientalist, who has added the life of Timour, and many curious notes.

<sup>d</sup> Sher Afend, the present Mogul, reads, rather, but cannot improve, the institutions of his great ancestor. The English translator relies on their internal evidence; but if any suspicion should arise of fraud and fiction, they will not be dispelled by Major Dary's letter. The Orientals have never cultivated the art of criticism; the poetry of a prince, less dependent perhaps, is not less narrative than that of a book-seller; nor can it be deemed incredible, that a Persian, the real author, should surrender the credit, as well as the sale and price of his works.

rope. The nations which he vanquished exercised a base and impotent revenge; and ignorance has long repeated the tale of calumny,* which had disfigured the birth and character, the person, and even the name, of Tamerlane.† Yet his real merit would be enhanced, rather than debased; by the elevation of a peasant to the throne of Asia; nor can his lowness be a theme of reproach, unless he had the weakness to blush at a natural, or perhaps an honourable, infirmity.

In the eyes of the Moguls, who held the indefeasible succession of the house of Zingis, he was doubtless a rebel subject; yet he sprang from the noble tribe of Berlass: his fifth ancestor, Garashar Negian, had been the viceroy of Zagatai, in his new realm of Transoxiana; and in the ascent of some generations, the branch of Timour is confounded, at least by the females,‡ with the

* The original of the tale is found in the following work, which is much esteemed for its floral elegance of style: Aboulé Améide (Abmed Ebn Arabashy) Visir of Berke gustave Timur. Arabes et Latins Edilés Samuel Henricus Margre. Præpositus, 1767, 2 vols. in quarto. This Syrian author is even a mathematician, and often an ignorant, erring; the very titles of his chapters are questions: as how the wind, as how the tongue, as how the viper, &c. The exquisite article of Timour, in Bibliothèque Orientale, is of a mixed nature, as if Herbelot indifferently drew his materials (qs. 877-888) from Khondemir, Ebn Arabashy, and the Liber ethik.

† Timour or Tamer signifies, in the Turkish language, Iron; and Eg is the appellation of a lord or power. By the change of a letter or accent, it is changed into Lanc or Lam; and a European corruption combines the two words in the appo of Tamerlane.

‡ After relating some false and foolish tales of Timour-Lanc, Arghach is compelled to speak truth, and to own him for a kinsman of Zingis, per ambages (as he possibly said) Supplicat Scitum (qv. 1, c. 1, p. 27). The testimony of Abulghasi Khan (qs. ii, c. 3, p. v, s. 3) is clear, unquestionable, and decisive.

CHAP.
LXV.

His first adventures,
A. D. 1361-
1370.

imperial stem.<sup>1</sup> He was born forty miles to the south of Samarcand, in the village of Sebzar, in the fruitful territory of Cash, of which his fathers were the hereditary chiefs, as well as of a toman of ten thousand horse.<sup>2</sup> His birth<sup>3</sup> was cast on one of those periods of anarchy which announce the fall of the Asiatic dynasties, and open a new field to adventurous ambition. The khans of Zaghatai were extinct; the emirs aspired to independence; and their domestic feuds could only be suspended by the conquest and tyranny of the khans of Kashgar, who, with an army of Getes or Calmucks,<sup>4</sup> invaded the Transoxian kingdom. From the twelfth year of his age, Timour had entered the field of action; in the twenty-fifth, he stood forth as the deliverer of his country; and the eyes and

<sup>1</sup> According to one of the pedigrees, the fourth ancestor of Zingis, and the grandfather of Timour, were brothers; and they agreed, that the posterity of the elder should succeed to the dignity of Khan, and that the descendants of the younger should fill the office of their minister and general. This tradition was at least convenient to justify the first steps of Timour's ambition (Institutions, p. 24, 25, from the two fragments of Timour's History).

<sup>2</sup> See the preface of Sherafaddin, and Abulfeda's Geography (Constantinople, &c. Doucepain, p. 60, 61); in the Old edition of Hudson's Minor Greek Geographers.

<sup>3</sup> See the nativity in Dr. Hyde (Syntagma Diarctæ, tom. iv. p. 166), as it was said by the astrologers of his grandson Ulugh Beg. He was born, A. D. 1336, April 9, 11° 57' E. N. lat. 36. I know not whether they can prove the great conjunction of the planets, from whence, like other resurrections and prophecies, Timour derived the surname of Sahib Keren, or master of the conjunctions (Mishir, Oroni, p. 278).

<sup>4</sup> In the Institutions of Timour, these subjects of the Khan of Kashgar are most improperly styled Ozbegs, or Turbans, a name which belongs to another branch and country of Tartars (Abulghasi, p. v. c. 3, p. vi, c. 3). Could I be sure that this word is in the Turkish language, I would boldly pronounce that the Institutions were framed a century after the death of Timour, since the establishment of the Turbans in Transoxiana.

wishes of the people were turned towards an hero who suffered in their cause. The chiefs of the law and of the army had pledged their salvation to support him with their lives and fortunes; but in the hour of danger they were silent and afraid; and, after waiting seven days on the hills of Samarrand, he retreated to the desert with only sixty horsemen. The fugitives were overtaken by a thousand Getes, whom he repulsed with incredible slaughter, and his enemies were forced to exclaim, "Timour is a wonderful man: fortune and the divine favour are with him." But in this bloody action his own followers were reduced to ten, a number which was soon diminished by the desertion of three Carizimians. He wandered in the desert with his wife, seven companions, and four horses; and sixty-two days was he plunged in a loathsome dungeon, from whence he escaped by his own courage, and the remorse of the oppressor. After swimming the broad and rapid stream of the Jihoon, or Oxus, he led, during some months, the life of a vagrant and outlaw on the borders of the adjacent states. But his fame shone brighter in adversity; he learned to distinguish the friends of his person, the associates of his fortune, and to apply the various characters of men for their advantage, and, above all, for his own. On his return to his native country, Timour was successively joined by the parties of his confederates, who anxiously sought him in the desert; nor can I refuse to describe, in his pathetic simplicity, one of their fortunate encounters. He presented himself as a guide to three chiefs, who were at the head of seventy horse. "When their eyes fell CHAP. LXV. "upon me," says Timour, "they were overwhelmed with joy; and they alighted from their horses; and they came and kneeled; and they kissed my stirrup. I also came down from my horse, and took each of them in my arms.

 And I put my turban on the head of the first chief; and my girdle, rich in jewels and wrought with gold, I bound on the loins of the second; and the third I clothed in my own coat. And they wept, and I wept also; and the hour of prayer was arrived, and we prayed.
 And we mounted our horses, and came to my dwelling; and I collected my people, and made a feast." His trusting hands were soon increased by the harvest of the tribes; he led them against a superior foe; and after some vicissitudes of war, the Gotes were finally driven from the kingdom of Transoxiana. He had done much for his own glory; but much remained to be done, much art to be exerted, and some blood to be spilt, before he could teach his equals to obey him as their master. The birth and power of emir Houssein compelled him to accept a vicious and unworthy colleague, whose sister was the best beloved of his wives. Their union was short and jealous; but the policy of Timour, in their frequent quarrels, exposed his rival to the reproach of injustice and perfidy; and, after a small defeat, Houssein was slain by some sagacious friends, who presumed, for the last time, to disobey the commands of their lord. At the age of thirty-four,* and in a

* The first book of Shereifuddin is employed on the private life of the hero; and by himself, or his secretary (Institutions, p. 257), enlarges

general diet or council, he was invested with imperial command; but he affected to revere the house of Zingis; and while the emir Timour reigned over Zagatai and the East, a nominal khun served as a private officer in the armies of his servant. A fertile kingdom, five hundred miles in length and in breadth, might have satisfied the ambition of a subject; but Timour aspired to the dominion of the world; and before his death, the crown of Zagatai was one of the twenty-seven crowns which he had placed on his head. Without expatiating on the victories of thirty-five campaigns; without describing the lines of march which he repeatedly traced over the continent of Asia; I shall briefly represent his conquests in, i. Persia; ii. Tartary; and, iii. India; and from thence proceed to the more interesting narrative of his Ottoman war.

1. For every war, a motive of safety or revenge, of honour or zeal, of right or convenience, may be readily found in the jurisprudence of conquerors. No sooner had Timour re-united to the patrimony of Zagatai the dependent countries of Carizme and Candahar, than he turned his eyes towards the kingdoms of Iran or Persia. From the Oxus to the Tigris, that extensive country was left without a lawful sovereign since the death of Abousaid, the last of the descendants of the great

CHAP.
LXV.

He ascends
the throne of Zagatai,
A. D. 1370,
April.

His conquests,
A. D. 1370-1380.
i. Of Persia,
A. D. 1380-
1393.

enlarges, with pleasure, on the thirteen designs and enterprises which most fully constitute his permanent merit. He even sours through the dark colouring of Arushah, p. 5, c. 7-12.

The conquests of Persia, Tartary, and India, are represented in the second and third books of Sherafeddin, and by Arushah, c. 12-52. Consult the excellent indexes to the Institutions.

CHAP.
LXV.

Houlacou. Peace and justice had been banished from the land above forty years; and the Mogul invader might seem to listen to the cries of an oppressed people. Their petty tyrants might have opposed him with confederate arms: they separately stood, and successively fell; and the difference of their fate was only marked by the promptitude of submission, or the obstinacy of resistance. Ibrahim, prince of Shirwan or Albania, kissed the footstool of the imperial throne. His peace-offerings of silks, horses, and jewels, were composed, according to the Tartar fashion, each article of nine pieces; but a critical spectator observed, that there were only eight slaves. "I myself am the ninth," replied Ibrahim, who was prepared for the remark; and his flattery was rewarded by the smile of Timour. Shah Mansour, prince of Fars, or the proper Persia, was one of the least powerful, but most dangerous, of his enemies. In a battle under the walls of Shiraz, he broke, with three or four thousand soldiers, the cout, or main body, of thirty thousand horse, where the emperor fought in person. No more than fourteen or fifteen guards remained near the standard of Timour: he stood firm as a rock, and received on his helmet two weighty strokes of a scymetar:<sup>a</sup> the Moguls rallied; the head of Mansour was thrown at his feet, and he declared his esteem of the valour of a foe, by extirpating all the males of so intrepid a race. From Shiraz, his troops advanced to the Persian gulf; and the richness and weakness of Ormuz were displayed in an annual tribute of six hundred thousand dinars of gold. Bagdad was no longer the city of peace, the seat of the caliphs; but the noblest conquest of Houlacon could not be overlooked by his ambitious successor. The whole course of the Tigris and Euphrates, from the mouth to the sources of those rivers, was reduced to his obedience: he entered Edessa; and the Turkmen of the black sheep were chastised for the sacrilegious pillage of a caravan of Mecca. In the mountains of Georgia, the native christians still braved the law and the sword of Mahomet; by three expeditions, he obtained the merit of the gazie, or holy war; and the prince of Telis became his proselyte and friend.

<sup>a</sup> The reverence of the Tartars for the mysterious number of nine is declared by Abulghazi Khan, who, for that reason, divides his Genealogical History into nine parts.

<sup>b</sup> According to Arakhsah (p. 1, c. 78, p. 183), the coward Timour ran away to his tent, and hid himself from the pursuit of Shah Mansour under the women's garments. Perhaps Sherafeddin (l. iii, c. 23) has magnified his courage.

n. A just retaliation might be urged for the invasion of Turkestan, or the eastern Tartary.
The dignity of Timour could not endure the

CHAP.
LXV.

n. or Turkestan,
i. e. 1370-
1382.

* The history of Ormuz is not unlike that of Tyre. The city, as the tradition, was destroyed by the Tartars, and removed to a neighbouring island, without much cause or regret. The kings of Ormuz, rich in the Indian trade and the pearl fishery, possessed large territories both in Persia and Arabia; but they were at first the tributaries of the sultans of Keriman, and at last were subjected to a lady, to the Portuguese tyrants from the treasury of their own vices (Marco Polo, l. i. c. 13, 19, fol. 7, 8. Al-Makka, Geographie Historique, p. 281, 282, an original chronicle of Ormuz, in Travels, or History of Persia, p. 375-376, and the numerous histories in the West of the History of Persia, of Ludovico Barboza (1593, fol. 187, of Andrea Corradi (1517), fol. 202, 203, and of Orlando Barboza (1516), fol. 313-314).

CHAP.
LXV.

impunity of the Gètes; he passed the Siloon, subdued the kingdom of Cashgar, and marched seven times into the heart of their country. His most distant camp was two months journey, or four hundred and eighty leagues, to the north-east of Samarcand; and his emirs, who traversed the river Irish, engraved in the forests of Siberia a rude memorial of their exploits. The conquest of Kipzak, or the western Tartary,* was founded on the double motive of aiding the distressed, and chastising the ungrateful. Toctamish, a fugitive prince, was entertained and protected in his court; the ambassadors of Aurang Khan were dismissed with an haughty denial, and followed on the same day by the armies of Zagatai; and their success established Toctamish in the Mogul empire of the north. But, after a reign of ten years, the new khán forgot the merits and the strength of his benefactor, the base usurper, as he deemed him, of the sacred rights of the house of Zingis. Through the gates of Derbend, he entered Persia at the head of ninety thousand horse: with the innumerable forces of Kipzak, Bulgaria, Circassia, and Russia, he passed the Siloon, burnt the palaces of Timour, and compelled him, amidst the winter snows, to contend for Samarcand and his life. After a mild expostulation and a glorious victory, the emperor resolved on revenge; and by the east and the west of the Caspian, and the Volga, he twice invaded Kipzak of Kipzak, his Russia, &c.

A. D. 1290-
1294.

* Arakelash had travelled into Kipzak, and acquired a complete knowledge of the geography, cities, and revolutions, of that northern region (p. 1, c. 44-49).

with such mighty powers, that thirteen miles were measured from his right to his left wing. In a march of five months, they rarely beheld the footsteps of man; and their daily subsistence was often trusted to the fortune of the chase. At length the armies encountered each other; but the treachery of the standard-bearer, who, in the heat of action, reversed the imperial standard of Kipenk, determined the victory of the Zagnais: and Toctamish (I speak the language of the Institutiona) gave the tribe of Touthi to the wind of desolation.* He fled to the christian duke of Lithuania; again returned to the banks of the Volga; and, after fifteen battles with a domestic rival, at last perished in the wilds of Siberia. The pursuit of a flying enemy carried Timour into the tributary provinces of Russia: a duke of the reigning family was made prisoner amidst the ruins of his capital; and Yeletz, by the pride and ignorance of the Orientals, might easily be confounded with the genuine metropolis of the nation. Moscow trembled at the approach of the Tartar, and the resistance would have been feeble, since the hopes of the Russians were placed in a miraculous image of the virgin, to whose protection they ascribed the casual and voluntary retreat of the conqueror. Ambition and prudence recalled him to the south; the desolate country was exhausted, and the Mogul soldiers were enriched with an immense spoil of precious * Institutiona of Timour, p. 123, 124. Mr. White, the editor, bestows some admiration on the superficial account of Sherah-Sin Q. M. c. 12, 13, 14, who was ignorant of the designs of Timour, and the true springs of action.

CHAP.
IX.

furs, of linen of Antioch,<sup>1</sup> and of ingots of gold and silver.* On the banks of the Don, or Tanais, he received an humble deputation from the consuls and merchants of Egypt,<sup>2</sup> Venice, Genoa, Catalonia, and Biscay, who occupied the commerce and city of Tana, or Azoph, at the mouth of the river. They offered their gifts, admired his magnificence, and trusted to his royal word. But the peaceful visits of an emir, who explored the state of the magazines and harbour, was speedily followed by the destructive presence of the Tartars. The city was reduced to ashes; the Moslems were pillaged and dismissed; but all the christians, who had not fled to their ships, were condemned either to death or slavery.<sup>3</sup> Revenge prompted him to burn the cities of Serui and Astrachan, the monuments of rising civilization;

* The furs of Russia are more credible than the fables. But the furs of Antioch has never been famous; and Antioch was in ruins. I suspect that it was some manufacture of Europe, which the Hanse merchants had imported by the way of Novogorod.

<sup>1</sup> M. Lavega (Hist. de Russie, tom. II, p. 247. Vie de Timour, p. 61-62, before the French version of the Insitatus) has corrected the error of Shereddin, and marked the true limit of Timour's conquests. His arguments are superfluous, and a simple appeal to the Russian annals is sufficient to prove that Moscow, which six years before, had been taken by Tartarish, escaped the arms of a more formidable invader.

<sup>2</sup> An Egyptian consul from Grand Cairo is mentioned in Badma's voyage to Tana in 1435, after the city had been rebuilt (Ramusio, tom. II, fol. 92).

<sup>3</sup> The sack of Azoph is described by Shereddin (l. III. c. 43), and much more particularly by the author of an Italian chronicle (Andrea de Rodolfo de Quera, in Chron. Tartarum, in Muratori Script. Rerum Italicarum, tom. xix, p. 802-803). He had conversed with the Milanese, two Venetian brothers, one of whom had been sent a deputy to the camp of Timour, and the other had lost at Azoph three sons and 17,000 ducats.

and his vanity proclaimed, that he had peue. CHAP.
LXV.
trated to the region of perpetual daylight, a strange phenomenon, which authorised his mahometan doctors to dispense with the obligation of evening prayer.*

III. When Timour first proposed to his princes M. Of Illu.
and emirs the invasion of India or Hindostan, a demon.
he was answered by a murmur of discontent; A. D. 1398,
"The rivers! and the mountains and deserts!
"and the soldiers clad in armour! and the "elephants, destroyers of men!" But the displeasure of the emperor was more dreadful than all these terrors; and his superior reason was convinced, that an enterprise of such tremendous aspect was safe and easy in the execution. He was informed by his spies of the weakness and anarchy of Hindostan: the sultans of the provinces had erected the standard of rebellion; and the perpetual infancy of sultan Mahmoud was despised, even in the haram of Delhi. The Mogul army moved in three great divisions:
and Timour observes, with pleasure, that the ninety-two squadrons of a thousand horse most fortunately corresponded with the ninety-two names or epithets of the prophet Mahomet.
Between the Sihoon and the Indus they crossed * Sherafeddin only says (l. iii, c. 13), that the rays of the setting, and those of the rising sun, were scarcely separated by any interval;

a problem which may be solved in the latitude of Moscow (the fifty-sixth degree), with the aid of the sun's horoscope, and a long summer twilight. But a day of sixty days (Khondemir apud A. Bernart, p.
286) would rigorously confine us within the polar circle.

† For the Indian war, see the Institutions (p. 123-130), the fourth book of Sherafeddin, and the history of Ferishta (in Dow, vol. ii, p.
1-20), which throws a general light on the affairs of Hindostan.

CHAP.
LXV.

one of the ridges of mountains, which are styled by the Arabian geographers, the stony girdles of the earth. The highland robbers were subdued or extirpated; but great numbers of men and horses perished in the snow: the emperor himself was let down a precipice on a portable scaffold; the ropes were one hundred and fifty cubits in length; and, before he could reach the bottom, this dangerous operation was five times repeated. Timour crossed the Indus at the ordinary passage of Attok; and successively traversed, in the footsteps of Alexander, the Panjab, or five rivers,* that fall into the master-stream. From Attok to Delli, the high road measures no more than six hundred miles; but the two conquerors deviated to the south-east: and the motive of Timour was to join his grandson, who had achieved, by his command, the conquest of Moul-tan. On the eastern bank of the Hyphasis, on the edge of the desert, the Macedonian hero halted and wept: the Mogul entered the desert, reduced the fortress of Batuir, and stood in arms before the gates of Delhi, a great and flourishing city, which had subsisted three centuries under the dominion of the mahometan kings. The siege, more especially of the castle, might have been a work of time; but he tempted, by the appearance of weakness, the sultan Mahmoud and his vizir

* The rivers of the Panjab, the five eastern branches of the Indus, have been laid down, for the first time, with truth and accuracy, in Major Rennel's incomparable map of Hindoostan. In his Critical Memoirs he illustrates, with judgment and learning, the marches of Alexander and Timour.

to descend into the plain, with ten thousand cuirassiers, forty thousand of his foot guards, and one hundred and twenty elephants, whose tusks are said to have been armed with sharp and poisoned daggers. Against these monsters, or rather, against the imagination of his troops, he condescended to use some extraordinary precautions of fire and a ditch, of iron spikes and a rampart of bucklers; but the event taught the Moguls to smile at their own fears; and, as soon as these unwieldy animals were routed, the inferior species (the men of India) disappeared from the field. Timur made his triumphal entry into the capital of Hindostan; and admired, with a view to imitate, the architecture of the stately mosch; but the order and licence of a general pillage and massacre polluted the festival of his victory. He resolved to purify his soldiers in the blood of the idolaters, or Gentoos, who still surpass, in the proportion of ten to one, the numbers of the Moslems. In this pious design, he advanced one hundred miles to the north-east of Delhi, passed the Ganges, fought several battles by land and water, and penetrated to the famous rock of Compele, the statue of the cow, that seems to discharge the mighty river, whose source is far distant among the mountains of Thibet.* His

* The two great rivers, the Ganges and Burrampoore, rise in Thibet, from the opposite ridges of the same hills, separate from each other to the distance of 1200 miles, and after a winding course of 2000 miles, again meet in one point near the gulf of Bengal. Yet so suspicious is fame, that the Burrampoore is a late discovery, while his famous Ganges has been the theme of ancient and modern story.

CHAP.
LXV.

return was along the skirts of the northern hills; nor could this rapid campaign of one year justify the strange foresight of his emirs, that their children, in a warm climate, would degenerate into a race of Hindoos.

His war against sultan Bejazet,
A. D. 1400,
Sept. 1.

It was on the banks of the Ganges that Timour was informed, by his speedy messengers, of the disturbances which had arisen on the confines of Georgia and Anatolia, of the revolt of the christians, and the ambitious designs of the sultan Bajazet. His vigour of mind and body was not impaired by sixty-three years, and innumerable fatigues; and, after enjoying some tranquil months in the palace of Samarcand, he proclaimed a new expedition of seven years into the western countries of Asia.* To the soldiers who had served in the Indian war, he granted the choice of remaining at home, or following their prince; but the troops of all the provinces and kingdoms of Persia were commanded to assemble at Ispahan, and wait the arrival of the imperial standard. It was first directed against the christians of Georgia, who were strong only in their rocks, their castles, and the winter season; but these obstacles were overcome by the zeal and perseverance of Timour: the rebels submitted to the tribute or the koran; and if both religions boasted of their martyrs, that name is more justly due to the christian story. Coopers, the scene of Timour's last victory, must be situated near Laldong, 1100 miles from Calcutta; and, in 1774, a British camp! (Rauval's Memoirs, p. 7, 39, 93, 94, 95).

* See the Institutions, p. 141, to the end of the first book, and Sherifiddin (l. v, c. 1-16) to the entrance of Timour into Syria.

prisoners, who were offered the choice of ab-juration or death. On his descent from the hills, the emperor gave audience to the first ambassadors of Bajazet, and opened the hostile correspondence of complaints and menaces; which fermented two years before the final explosion. Between two jealous and haughty neighbours, the motives of quarrel will seldom be wanting. The Mogul and Ottoman conquests now touched each other in the neighbourhood of Erzeroum, and the Euphrates; nor had the doubtful limit been ascertained by time and treaty. Each of these ambitious monarchs might accuse his rival of violating his territory; of threatening his vassals; and protecting his rebels; and, by the name of rebels, each understood the fugitive princes, whose kingdoms he had usurped, and whose life or liberty he implacably pursued. The resemblance of character was still more dangerous than the opposition of interest; and in their victorious career, Timour was impatient of an equal, and Bajazet was ignorant of a superior. The first epistle* of the Mogul emperor must have provoked, instead of reconciling the Turkish sultan; whose family and nation he affected to despise.

* We have three copies of these hostile epistles in the Diwan (p. 117), in Sherehshahr (l. v, c. 14), and in Ayres (from 11, s. 19, p. 183-201); which agree with each other in the sense and substance, though they differ in the style. It is probable, that they have been translated, with various additions, from the Turkish original into the Arabic and Persian tongues.

† The Mogul ever distinguishes himself and his countrymen by the name of Turks, and stigmatises the race and system of Bajazet with the less honourable epithet of Turkmen. Yet I do not understand how CHAP. " Dost thou not know, that the greatest part of LXY, " Asia is subject to our arms and our laws? that " our invincible forces extend from one sea to " the other? that the potentates of the earth

 " form a line before our gate? and that we have " compelled fortune herself to watch over the " prosperity of our empire? What is the founda" tion of thy insolence and folly? Thou hast
 " fought some battles in the woods of Anatolia;
 " contemptible trophies! Thou hast obtained
 " some victories over the christians of Europe;
 " thy sword was blessed by the apostle of God;
 " and thy obedience to the precept of the koran,
 " in waging war against the infidels, is the sole
 " consideration that prevents us from destroying " thy country, the frontier and bulwark of the " Moslem world. Be wise in time; reflect;
 " repent; and avert the thunder of our vengeance,
 " which is yet suspended over thy head. Thou " art no more than a pismire; why wilt thou seek " to provoke the elephants? Alas, they will " trample thee under their feet." In his replies, Bajazet poured forth the indignation of a soul which was deeply stung by such unusual contempt.
 After retorting the basest reproaches on the thief and rebel of the desert, the Ottoman recapitulates his boasted victories in Iran, Touran, and the Indies; and labours to prove, that Timour had never triumphed unless by his own perfidy and the vices of his foes. " Thy armies are innume" rable; be they so; but what are the arrows of the Ottomans could be. Descended from a Turkish nation; those island shepherds were so remote from the sea, and all maritime affairs

" the flying Tartar against the scymetars and " battle-axes of my firm and invincible janizaries?
 " I will guard the princes who have implored my " protection: ~~sink~~ <sup>send</sup> them in my tents. The cities " of Arzingan and Erzeroum are mine, and un" less the tribute be duly paid, I will demand
 " the arrears under the walls of Tauris and Sul-
 " tania." The ungovernable rage of the sultan at length betrayed him to an insult of a more domestic kind. " If I fly from my arms," said he, " may my wives be thrice divorced from my " bed: but if thou hast not courage to meet me
 " in the field, mayest thou again receive thy wives
 " after they have thrice endured the embraces of " a stranger."<sup>2</sup> Any violation by word or deed of the secrecy of the harem is an unpardonable offence among the Turkish nations;<sup>3</sup> and the political quarrel of the two monarchs was embittered by private and personal resentment. Yet in his first expedition, Timour was satisfied with the siege and destruction of Siwas or Sebaste, a strong city on the borders of Anatolia; and he revenged the indiscretion of the Ottoman on a

<sup>1</sup> According to the hikmet ii. p. 27, and Sade's Discourses, p. 154, a man who had thrice divorced his wife (who had thrice reposed the words of a divorce could not take her again, till after she had been married to, and repudiated by, another husband: an ignominious transaction, which it is needless to aggravate, by supposing that the first husband must see her enjoyed by a second before his face (Hyemut's State of the Ottoman Empire, i. li. c. 21).

<sup>2</sup> The common delicacy of the Orientals, in never speaking of their women, is carried in a much higher degree by Arabians to the Turkish nations; and it is remarkable enough that Chalmers (i. li.
 p. 53) had some knowledge of the prejudice and the fault.

CHAP.
LXV.

Timour invades Syria, &c.
1382, &c. to 1400.

garrison of four thousand Armenians, who were buried alive for the brave and faithful discharge of their duty. As a muscullum he seemed to respect the pious occupation of Bajazet, who was still engaged in the blockade of Constantinople; and after this salutary lesson, the Mogul conqueror checked his pursuit, and turned aside to the invasion of Syria and Egypt. In those transactions, the Ottoman prince, by the Orientals, and even by Timour, is styled the Kaiser of Rome, the Cesar of the Romans: a title which, by a small anticipation, might be given to a monarch who possessed the provinces, and threatened the city, of the successors of Constantine.<sup>1</sup>

The military republic of the Mamelukes still reigned in Egypt and Syria; but the dynasty of the Turks was overthrown by that of the Circassians;<sup>2</sup> and their favourite Barkok, from a slave and a prisoner, was raised and restored to the throne. In the midst of rebellion and discord, he braved the menaces, corresponded with the enemies, and detained the ambassadors, of the Mogul, who patiently expected his decrease, to revenge the crimes of the father on the feeble reign of his son Farage. The Syrian emirs<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> For the style of the Mogul, see the Institutions (p. 124, 147), and for the Persian, the Bibliothèque Orientale (p. 887); but I do not find that the title of Cesar has been applied, by the Arabians, or assumed by the Ottomans themselves.

<sup>2</sup> See the reigns of Wockok and Phaulok, in M. de Gougenot (tom. iv, p. 257), who, from the Arabic text of Aboulcassem, Elm Schumash, and Abulak, has added some facts to our common stock of materials.

<sup>3</sup> For these recent and domestic transactions, Arabshah, though a partial, is a credible witness (tom. i, c. 64-66, tom. ii, c. 1-14).

were assembled at Aleppo to repel the invasion : they confided in the fame and discipline of the Mamalukes, in the temper of their swords and lances of the purest steel of Damascus, in the strength of their walled cities, and in the populousness of sixty thousand villages; and instead of sustaining a siege, they threw open their gates and arrayed their forces in the plain. But these forces were not cemented by virtue and union; and some powerful emirs had been seduced to desert or betray their more loyal companions. Timour's front was covered with a line of Indian elephants, whose turrets were filled with archers and Greek fire: the rapid evolution of his cavalry completed the dismay and disorder: the Syrian crowds fell back on each other; many thousands were stifled or slaughtered in the entrance of the great street: the Moguls entered with the fugitives; and, after a short defence, the citadel, the impregnable citadel of Aleppo, was surrendered by cowardice or treachery. Among the suppliants and captives, Timour distinguished the doctors of the law, whom he invited to the dangerous honour of a personal conference.—The Mogul prince was a zealous Mussulman; but his Persian schools had taught him to revere the memory of Ali and Hussein: and he had imbibed

See Aleppo,
c. 1400.
Vol. II.

Timour must have been allured to a Syrian; but the notoriety of fact would have obliged him, in some measure, to respect his enemy and himself. His letters may convert the Turkish words of Baruch (c. 1, 17-19).

* These interesting conversations appear to have been copied by Archibald (rom. 1, c. 68, p. 635-645) from the original and historical Pica Schottland, a principal actor. Yet how could he be there seventy-five years afterwards (Archibald, p. 202)?

CHAP.
LXV.

a deep prejudice against the Syrians, as the enemies of the son of the daughter of the apostle of God. To these doctors he proposed a captious question, which the casuists of Bochara, Samarcand, and Herat, were incapable of resolving. "Who are the true martyrs, of those who are slain on my side, or on that of my enemies?" But he was silenced, or satisfied, by the dexterity of one of the cadhis of Aleppo, who replied, in the words of Mahomet himself, that the motive, not the ensign, constitutes the martyr; and that the Moslems of either party, who fight only for the glory of God, may deserve that sacred appellation. The true succession of the caliphs was a controversy of a still more delicate nature, and the frankness of a doctor, too honest for his situation, provoked the emperor to exclaim, "Ye are as false as those of Damascus: Mouwiyah was an usurper, Yezid a tyrant, and Ali alone is the lawful successor of the prophet." A prudent explanation restored his tranquillity; and he passed to a more familiar topic of conversation. "What is your age?" said he to the cadhi. "Fifty years."—"It would be the age of my eldest son: you see me here (continued Timour) a poor, lame, decrepit mortal. Yet by my arm has the Almighty been pleased to subdue the kingdoms of Iran, Touran, and the Indies. I am not a man of blood; and God is my witness, that in all my wars I have never been the aggressor, and that my enemies have always been the authors of their own calamity." During this peaceful conversation, the streets of Aleppo streamed with blood, and re-echoed with the cries of mothers and children, with the shrieks of violated virgins. The rich plunder that was abandoned to his soldiers might stimulate their avarice; but their cruelty was enforced by the peremptory command of producing an adequate number of heads, which, according to his custom, were curiously piled in columns and pyramids: the Moguls celebrated the feast of victory, while the surviving Moslems passed the night in tears and in chains. I shall not dwell on the march of the destroyer from Aleppo to Damascus, where he was rudely encountered, and almost overthrown, by the armies of Egypt. A retrograde motion was imputed to his distress and despair: one of his nephews deserted to the enemy; and Syria rejoiced in the tale of his defeat, when the sultan was driven by the revolt of the Mamalukes to escape with precipitation and shame to his palace of Cairo. Abandoned by their prince, the inhabitants of Damascus still defended their walls; and Timour consented to raise the siege, if they would adorn his retreat with a gift or ransom; each article of nine pieces. But no sooner had he introduced himself into the city, under colour of a truce, than he perfidiously violated the treaty; imposed a contribu-

Damascus,
A. D. 1401,
Jan. 23.
tion of ten millions of gold; and animated his troops to chastise the posterity of those Syrians who had executed, or approved, the murder of the grandson of Mahomet. A family which had given honourable burial to the head of Hosein,

CHAP.
LXV.

and a colony of artificers whom he sent to labour at Samarcand, were alone reserved in the general massacre: and, after a period of seven centuries, Damascus was reduced to ashes, because a Tartar was moved by religious zeal to avenge the blood of an Arab. The losses and fatigues of the campaign obliged Timour to renounce the conquest of Palestine and Egypt: but in his return to the Euphrates, he delivered Aleppo to the flames: and justified his pious motive by the pardon and reward of two thousand sectaries of Ali, who were desirous to visit the tomb of his son. I have expatiated on the personal anecdotes which mark the character of the Mogul hero; but I shall briefly mention,* that he erected on the ruins of Bagdad a pyramid of ninety thousand heads; again visited Georgia; encamped on the banks of Araxes; and proclaimed his resolution of marching against the Ottoman emperor. Conscious of the importance of the war, he collected his forces from every province: eight hundred thousand men were enrolled on his military list;*

and. B. =
dash.
A. D. 1401.
July 23.

* The marches and occupations of Timour between the Syrian and Ottoman wars, are represented by Sherehidin (l. v. c. 28-33) and Ardabeh (ibid. ii. c. 13-16).

† This number of 250,000 was extracted by Aschadeh, or rather by Elie Schamoun, an Armenian Tatar, on the field of a Christian victory (see l. c. 38, p. 411; and it is remarkable enough, that a Greek historian (Theophr. l. i. c. 29) adds no more than 50,000 Arab. Timour reckons 1,000,000; another Latin contemporary (Clement. Alexandrin. apud Muscard. tom. i. c. p. 600) 1,100,000; and a German writer, who was present at the battle of Angora (Lamotte, ed. Chateaubry, l. ii. p. 62), Timour, in his institutions, has not engaged to calculate his troops, his subjects, or his revenues.

but the splendid commands of five and ten thousand horse, may be rather expressive of the rank and pension of the chiefs, than of the genuine number of effective soldiers.<sup>b</sup> In the pillage of Syria, the Moguls had acquired immense riches: but the delivery of their pay and arrears for seven years, more firmly attached them to the imperial standard.

During this diversion of the Mogul arms, Bajazet had two years to collect his forces for a more serious encounter. They consisted of four hundred thousand horse and foot,* whose merit and fidelity were of an unequal complexion. We may discriminate the janizaries, who have been gradually raised to an establishment of forty thousand men; a national cavalry, the spahis of modern times; twenty thousand cuirassiers of Europe, clad in black and impenetrable armour; the troops of Anatolia, whose princes had taken refuge in the camp of Timour, and a colony of Tartars, whom he had driven from Kipzark, and to whom Bajazet had assigned a settlement in the plains of Adrianople. The fearless confidence of the sultan urged him to meet his antagonist; and, as if he had chosen that spot for revenge, he displayed his banners near the ruins of the unfortu-

<sup>a</sup> A wide latitude of non-effectives was allowed by the great Mogul for his own guards and the benefit of his subjects. Baitur's garrison was Pargi-Hamir, commander of 5000 horse; of which he maintained as many as 500 (Voyages, tom. 3, p. 366, 367).

<sup>b</sup> Timour himself gave at 400,000 men the Ottoman army (Ottoman history, p. 253), which is reduced to 150,000 by Phaultra (l. 1, v. 21), and swelled by the German soldiers to 1,400,000. It is evident that the Moguls were the more numerous.

CHAP.
LXV.

nate Sevas. In the meanwhile, Timour moved from the Araxes through the countries of Armenia and Anatolia: his boldness was secured by the wisest precautions; his speed was guided by order and discipline; and the woods, the mountains, and the rivers, were diligently explored by the flying squadrons, who marked his road and preceded his standard. Firm in his plan of fighting in the heart of the Ottoman kingdom, he avoided their camp; dextrously inclined to the left; occupied Cæsarea; traversed the salt desert and the river Halys; and invested Angora: while the sultan, immovable and ignorant in his post, compared the Tartar swiftness to the crawling of a snail: he returned on the wings of indignation to the relief of Angora; and as both generals were alike impatient for action, the plains round that city were the scene of a memorable battle, which has immortalized the glory of Timour and the shame of Bajazet. For this signal victory, the Mogul emperor was indebted to himself, to the genius of the moment, and the discipline of thirty years. He had improved the tactics, without violating the manners, of his nation,* whose force still consisted in the missile weapons, and rapid evolutions, of a numerous

Battle of Angora,
A. D. 1402,
July 25.

* It may not be useless to mark the distances between Angora and the neighbouring cities, by the journey of the caravan, each of twenty or twenty-five miles; to Smyrna 24, to Ephesus 10, to Rhodes 10, to Tenedos 8, to Siliopu 10, to Nicomedia 8, to Constantinople 12 or 13. (See Timourbeck, Voyage au Levant, tom. II. livre xxix.)

* See the System of Tactics in the Institutions, which the English editors have illustrated with elaborate plans (p. 373-402).

cavalry. From a single troop to a great army, CHAP.
LXV.
the mode of attack was the same: a foremost line first advanced to the charge, and was supported in a just order by the squadrons of the great vanguard. The general's eye watched over the field, and at his command the front and rear of the right and left wings successively moved forwards in their several divisions, and in a direct or oblique line: the enemy was pressed by eighteen or twenty attacks; and each attack afforded a chance of victory. If they all proved fruitless, or unsuccessful, the occasion was worthy of the emperor himself, who gave the signal of advancing to the standard and main body, which he led in person.* But in the battle of Angora, the main body itself was supported, on the flanks, and in the rear, by the bravest squadrons of the reserve, commanded by the sons and grandsons of Timour. The conqueror of Hindostan ostentatiously shewed a line of elephants, the trophies, rather than the instruments of victory: the use of the Greek fire was familiar to the Moguls and Ottomans: but had they borrowed from Europe the recent invention of gunpowder and cannon, the artificial thunder, in the hands of either nation, must have turned the fortune of the day.† In that day,

* The sultan himself says Timour must show just the sort of courage that the stirrup of padshahs. A Tartar metaphor, which is lost in the English, but preserved in the French, records of the Institutions (p. 136, 137).

† The Greek fire, on Timour's side, is noticed by Shertshidie (G. v. c. 17); but Voltaire's strange suspicion, that some cannon, introduced with strange chambers, must have been used by that monarch to Delhi, is refuted by the universal silence of contemporaries.

CHAP.
LXV.

Bajazet displayed the qualities of a soldier and a chief: but his genius sunk under a stronger ascendancy; and from various motives, the greatest part of his troops failed him in the decisive moment. His rigour and avarice had provoked a mutiny among the Turks; and even his son Soliman too hastily withdrew from the field. The forces of Anatolia, loyal in their revolt, were drawn away to the banners of their lawful princes. His Tartar allies had been tempted by the letters and emissaries of Timour;* who reproached their ignoble servitude under the slaves of their fathers; and offered to their hopes the dominion of their new, or the liberty of their ancient, country. In the right wing of Bajazet, the cuirassiers of Europe charged, with faithful hearts and irresistible arms; but these men of iron were soon broken by an artful flight and headlong pursuit; and the Janizaries alone, without cavalry or missile weapons, were encompassed by the circle of the Mogul hunters. Their valour was at length oppressed by heat, thirst, and the weight of numbers; and the unfortunate sultan, afflicted with the gout in his hands and feet, was transported from the field on the fleetest of his horses. He

Defeat and captivity of Bajazet.

was pursued and taken by the titular khan of Zugatai; and after his capture, and the defeat of the Ottoman powers, the kingdom of Anatolia

* Timour has dissimulated this secret and important negotiation with the Tartars, which is indubitably proved by the joint evidence of the Arabian (tom. 3, c. 47, p. 391), Turkish (Annal. Leucidae, p. 371), and Persian historians (Khamousah, apud d'Hertefois, p. 224).

submitted to the conqueror, who planted his standard at Kiotahia, and dispersed on all sides the ministers of rapine and destruction. Mirza Mehemed Sultan, the eldest and best beloved of his grandsons, was dispatched to Bourza, with thirty thousand horse; and such was his youthful ardour, that he arrived with only four thousand at the gates of the capital, after performing in five days a march of two hundred and thirty miles. Yet fear is still more rapid in its course; and Soliman, the son of Bajazet, had already passed over to Europe with the royal treasure. The spoil, however, of the palace and city was immense: the inhabitants had escaped; but the buildings, for the most part of wood, were reduced to ashes. From Bourza, the grandson of Timour advanced to Nier, even yet a fair and flourishing city; and the Mogul squadrons were only stopped by the waves of the Propontia. The same success attended the other mirzas and emirs in their excursions: and Smyrna, defended by the zeal and courage of the Rhodian knights, alone deserved the presence of the emperor himself. After an obstinate defence, the place was taken by storm; all that breathed was put to the sword; and the heads of the christian heroes were launched from the engines, on board of two carracks, or great ships of Europe, that rode at anchor in the harbour. The Moslems of Asia rejoiced in their deliverance from a dangerous and domestic foe, and a parallel was drawn between the two rivals, by observing that Timour, in fourteen days, had

CHAP. reduced a fortress which had sustained seven LXV. years the siege, or at least the blockade of Bajazet.<sup>1</sup>

The history of his iron cage

The iron cage in which Bajazet was imprisoned by Tamerlane, so long and so often repeated as a moral lesson, is now rejected as a fable by the modern writers, who smile at the vulgar credulity.<sup>2</sup> They appeal with confidence to the Persian history of Sherefeddin Ali, which has been given to our curiosity in a French version, and from which I shall collect and abridge a more specious narrative of this memorable transaction.

disproved by the Persian history of Timur

No sooner was Timour informed that the captive Ottoman was at the door of his tent, than he graciously stepped forwards to receive him, seated him by his side, and mingled with just reproaches a soothing pity for his rank and misfortune. "Alas!" said the emperor, "the decree of fate is now accomplished by your own fault: it is the web which you have woven, the thorns of the tree which yourself have planted. I wished to spare, and even to assist, the champion of the Moslems; you braved our threats; you despised our friendship; you forced us to enter your kingdom with our invincible armies. Behold the event. Had you vanquished, I am

<sup>1</sup> For the war of Anatolia or Roum, I add some hints in the introduction to the exquisite narratives of Sherefeddin (O. v. c. 34-65) and Atalouah (ibid. ii. c. 20-53). On this part only of Timour's history, it is useful to consult the Turks (Cantemir, p. 33, 32. Annal. Louis. clavi. p. 330-371) and the Gesta (Florentia, l. 3, c. 29. Ducas, c. 15-17. Chalcodylea, l. 101).

<sup>2</sup> The scepticism of Vallaure (Recueil sur l'Histoire Generale, c. 66) is ready in this, as on every occasion, to reject a popular tale, and to diminish the magnitude of vice and virtue; and on most occasions his incredulity is reasonable.

"not ignorant of the fate which you reserved for "myself and my troops. But I disdain to re"tallate: your life and honour are secure: and "I shall express my gratitude to God by my "clemency to man." The royal captive shewed some signs of repentance, accepted the humiliation of a robe of honour, and embraced with tears his son Mousa, who, at his request, was sought and found among the captives of the field. The Ottoman princes were lodged in a splendid pavilion; and the respect of the guards could be surpassed only by their vigilance. On the arrival of the haram from Boura, Timour restored the queen Despina and her daughter to their father and husband; but he piously required that the Servian princess, who had hitherto been indulged in the profession of christianity, should embrace without delay the religion of the prophet. In the feast of victory, to which Bajazet was invited, the Mogul emperor placed a crown on his head and a sceptre in his hand, with a solemn assurance of restoring him with an increase of glory to the throne of his ancestors. But the effect of this promise was disappointed by the sultan's untimely death: amidst the care of the most skilful physicians, he expired of an apoplexy at Akshehr, the Antioch of Pisidia, about nine months after his defeat. The victor dropped a tear over his grave: his body, with royal pomp, was conveyed to the mausoleum which he had erected at Boura;
 and his son Mousa, after receiving a rich present of gold and jewels, of horses and arms, was in-

 CHAP.
LXX.

CHAP. LXV. vested by a patent in red ink with the kingdom of Anatolia.

Such is the portrait of a generous conqueror, which has been extracted from his own memoirs, and dedicated to his son and grandson, nineteen years after his decease,* and, at a time when the truth was remembered by thousands, a manifest falsehood would have implied a satire on his real conduct. Weighty indeed is this evidence, adopted by all the Persian histories;† yet flattery, more especially in the East, is base and audacious; and the harsh and ignominious treatment of Bajazet is attested by a chain of witnesses, some of whom shall be produced in the order of their time and country. 1. The reader has not forgot the garrison of French, whom the marshal Boucicault left behind him for the defence of Constantinople. They were on the spot to receive the earliest and most faithful intelligence of the overthrow of their great adversary; and it is more than probable that some of them accompanied the Greek embassy to the camp of Tamerlane. From their account, the hardships of the prison and death of Bajazet are affirmed by the marshal's servant and historian, within the ambassadors, &c.

by the French;

* See the history of Sher Shahin, li. v. c. 10, 59, 33, 30, 60. This work was finished at Shiraz, in the year 1424, and dedicated to Sultan Ibrahim, the son of Sher Shah, the son of Timur, who reigned in Persia in his father's lifetime.

† After the perusal of Khondemir, Rih-i-Sadounah, &c. the learned M. Herbelot (Biblioth. Orientale, p. 581) may affirm, that this fable is not mentioned in the most authentic histories; but his denial of the visible testimony of Arakiah, leaves some room to suspect his authority.

distance of seven years.* 2. The name of Poggius CHAP.
LXV.
the Italian,† is deservedly famous among the re-vivers of learning in the fifteenth century. His By the Italians elegant dialogue on the vicissitudes of fortune,‡ was composed in his fiftieth year, twenty-eight years after the Turkish victory of Tamerlane;§ whom he celebrates as not inferior to the illustrious barbarians of antiquity. Of his exploits and discipline, Poggius was informed by several ocular witnesses; nor does he forget an example so apposite to his theme as the Ottoman monarch, whom the Scythian confined like a wild beast in an iron cage, and exhibited a spectacle to Asia. I might add the authority of two Italian chronicles, perhaps of an earlier date, which would prove at least that the same story, whether false or true, was imparted into Europe

* *Et fut lui mesme (Bajazet) pris, et mené en prison, en laquelle mourut de chere mort / Memoires de Bourcmaut, p. 1, c. 57. These memoirs were composed while the marshal was still governor of Genoa, from whence he was expelled in the year 1406, by a popular insurrection (Muratori, Annali d'Italia, tom. xii, p. 473, 474).*

† The reader will find a satisfactory account of the life and writings of Poggius in the Poggiana, an entertaining work of M. Lantini, and in the Willelmoes Latinae medii et infimae Aetatis of Petrus (tom. v, p. 305-308). Poggius was born in the year 1360, and died in 1439.

‡ The dialogue de Varietate Fortunae (of which a complete and elegant edition has been published at Paris in 1773, in 8vo) was composed a short time before the death of pope Martin v (p. 5), and consequently about the end of the year 1436.

§ See a splendid and eloquent eulogium of Tamerlane, p. 34-39, ipso enim mox (post Poggium) qui fuit in ejus castris . . . . Regem vicum cepit, invidiosus in modum deum invidiam per amicum, Asian circumdedit egregiam admirandum que speculationem fortune.

CHAP. LXV.
 3, by the Arabs

with the first tidings of the revolution.* S. A. the time when Poggius flourished at Rome, Ahmed Ebn Arabishah composed at Damascus the florid and malevolent history of Timour, for which he had collected materials in his journeys over Turkey and Tartary.<sup>3</sup> Without any possible correspondence between the Latin and the Arabian writer, they agree in the fact of the iron cage; and their agreement is a striking proof of their common veracity. Ahmed Arabishah likewise relates another outrage, which Bajazet endured, of a more domestic and tender nature. His indiscreet mention of women and divorces was deeply resented by the jealous Tartar: in the feast of victory, the wine was served by female cupbearers, and the sultan beheld his own concubines and wives confounded among the slaves, and exposed without a veil to the eyes of intemperance. To escape a similar indignity, it is said that his successors, except in a single instance, have abstained from legitimate nuptials; and the Ottoman practice and belief, at least in the sixteenth century, is attested by the observing Busbequius,<sup>4</sup> ambassador from the court of Vienna to the great Soliman. 4. Such is the separation of language, that the testimony of a Greek is not less independent than that of a Latin or an Arab. I suppress the names of Chalcondyles and Ducas, who flourished in a later period, and who speak in a less positive tone; but more attention is due to George Phranza,* protovestiare of the last emperors, and who was born a year before the battle of Angora. Twenty-two years after that event, he was sent ambassador to Amurath the second; and the historian might converse with some veteran janizaries, who had been made prisoners with the sultan, and had themselves seen him in his iron cage. 5. The last evidence, in every sense, is that of the Turkish annals, which have been consulted or transcribed by Leunclavius, Pocock, and Cantemir.† They unanimously deplore the captivity of the iron cage; and some credit may be allowed to national historians, who cannot stigmatize the Tartar without uncovering the shame of their king and country.

* The Cronicon Tartarorum (in Museum), Script. Rerum Italico-rum, tom. xiii. p. 600; and the Annales Rhenani (ibid. tom. viii. p. 674). The two authors, Andrew de Rubeus de Quercu, and James de Debyto, were both correspondents, and both chancellors, the one of Trevis, the other of Ferrara. The substance of the former is the most positive.

* See Ardenbach, tom. ii. c. 15. 34. He travelled in regibus Romanorum, &c. 1423 (i. e. 1422, July 27), tom. ii. c. 7, p. 13.

<sup>4</sup> Busbequius in Legatione Turcica, epist. i. p. 62. Yet his respectable authority is somewhat shaken by the subsequent marriage of Amurat II. with a Serbian, and of Mahomet II. with an Asiatic princess (Cassini, p. 87, 97).

From these opposite premises, a fair and moderate conclusion may be deduced. I am satisfied that Sherrefahin Ali has faithfully described the first ostentatious interview, in which the conqueror, whose spirits were harmonized by success, affected the character of generosity. But his mind was insensibly alienated by the unseasonable arrogance of Bajazet: the complaints of his ene-

* See the testimony of George Phranza (l. i. c. 39), and his life in Hæcklin's de Script. Byzant. p. 1, c. 401. Chalcondyles and Ducas speak in general terms of Bajazet's studies.

† Annales Leunclav. p. 321. Pocock, Prolegomena ad Adolphum Dymari. Cantemir, p. 55.

CHAP.
LXV.

Death of Bajazet,
a. d. 1402,
March 8.

Term of the conquest of Timour,
a. d. 1402.

mies, the Anatolian princes, were just and vehement; and Timour betrayed a design of leading his royal captive in triumph to Samarcand. An attempt to facilitate his escape, by digging a mine under the tent, provoked the Mogul emperor to impose a harsher restraint; and in his perpetual marches, an iron cage on a waggon might be invented, not as a wanton insult, but as a rigorous precaution. Timour had read in some fabulous history a similar treatment of one of his predecessors, a king of Persia; and Bajazet was condemned to represent the person, and expiate the guilt of the Roman Cæsar.<sup>a</sup> But the strength of his mind and body fainter under the trial, and his premature death might, without injustice, be ascribed to the severity of Timour. He warred not with the dead; a tear and a sepulchre were all that he could bestow on a captive who was delivered from his power; and if Mousa, the son of Bajazet, was permitted to reign over the ruins of Boura, the greatest part of the province of Anatolia had been restored by the conqueror to their lawful sovereigns.

From the Irish and Volga to the Persian gulf, and from the Ganges to Damascus and the Archipelago, Asia was in the hands of Timour; his armies were invincible, his ambition was boundless, and his zeal might aspire to conquer and convert the christian kingdoms of the West, which already trembled at his name. He touched the utmost verge of the land; but an insuperable, though narrow, sea rolled between the two continents of Europe and Asia;* and the lord of so many lions, or myriads, of horse, was not master of a single galley. The two passages of the Bosphorus and Hellespont, of Constantinople and Gallipoli, were possessed, the one by the christians, the other by the Turks. On this great occasion, they forgot the difference of religion, to act with union and firmness in the common cause: the double straits were guarded with ships and fortifications; and they separately withheld the transports which Timour demanded of either nation, under the pretence of attacking their enemy. At the same time, they soothed his pride with tributary gifts and suppliant embassies, and prudently tempted him to retreat with the honour of victory. Soliman, the son of Bajazet, implored his clemency for his father and himself; accepted, by a red patent, the investiture of the kingdom of Romania, which he already held by the sword; and reiterated his ardent wish, of casting himself in person at the feet of the king of the world. The Greek * Arabelah (tom. ii. c. 25) describes, like a curious traveller, the straits of Gallipoli and Constantinople. To acquire a just idea of these events, I have compared the narratives and prejudices of the Megalots, Turks, Greeks, and Arabians. The Spanish ambassador mentions the hostile action of the christians and Ottomans (Vie de Timour, p. 20).

<sup>a</sup> A Sapor, a king of Persia, had been made prisoner, and inclosed in the figure of a sow's hile, by Maxmian or Galerius Cæsar. Such is the fable related by Rutenhius (Annal. tom. i. p. 421, vers. Ponsch.) The recollection of this true history (Decline and Fall, &c. vol. ii. p. 144-146) will teach us to appreciate the knowledge of the Orientalists of the ages which precede the highest.

CHAP.
LXV.

emperor* (either John or Manuel) submitted to pay the same tribute which he had stipulated with the Turkish sultan, and ratified the treaty by an oath of allegiance, from which he could absolve his conscience as soon as the Mogul arms had retired from Anatolia. But the fears and fancy of nations ascribed to the ambitious Tamerlane a new design of vast and romantic compass; a design of subduing Egypt and Africa, marching from the Nile to the Atlantic ocean, entering Europe by the straits of Gibraltar, and after imposing his yoke on the kingdoms of Christendom, of returning home by the deserts of Russia and Tartary. This remote, and perhaps imaginary, danger was averted by the submission of the sultan of Egypt; the honours of the prayer and the coin attested at Cairo the supremacy of Timour; and a rare gift of a giraffe, or camelopard, and nine ostriches, represented at Samarcand the tribute of the African world. Our imagination is not less astonished by the portrait of a Mogul, who, in his camp before Smyrna, meditates, and almost accomplishes, the invasion of the Chinese empire.† Timour was urged to this enterprise by national honour and religious zeal. The torrents which he had shed of mussulman blood could be expiated only by an equal destruction of the infideis; and as he now stood at the gates of paradise, he might best secure his glorious entrance, by demolishing the idols of China, founding mosques in every city, and establishing the profession of faith in one God, and his prophet Mahomet. The recent expulsion of the house of Zingis was an insult on the Mogul name; and the disorders of the empire afforded the fairest opportunity for revenge. The illustrious Hongvou, founder of the dynasty of Ming, died four years before the battle of An-gora; and his grandson, a weak and unfortunate youth, was burnt in his palace, after a million of Chinese had perished in the civil war.* Before he evacuated Anatolia, Timour dispatched beyond the Sihoon a numerous army, or rather colony, of his old and new subjects, to open the road, to subdue the pagan Calmucks and Mungals, and to found cities and magazines in the desert; and, by the diligence of his lieutenant, he soon received a perfect map and description of the unknown regions, from the source of the Irishi to the wall of China. During these preparations, the emperor achieved the final conquest of Georgia; passed the winter on the banks of the Araxes; appeased the troubles of Persia; and slowly returned to his capital, after a campaign of four years and nine months.

* Since the name of Caesar had been transferred to the sultans of Rome, the Greek princes of Constantinople (Micrologus, l. 7, c. 34) were confounded with the christian lords of Calicut, Timaculien, &c. under the title of Tekkur, which is derived by corruption from the genitive ty tekur (Cantemir, p. 21).

† See Micrologus, l. 7, c. 4, who speaks, in a just manner, the road to China, which Arabian (tom. II. c. 23) paints in vague and theoretical colours.

* Synopsis Hist. Sinens., p. 74-78 (in the fourth part of the Relation de Thierney); Duhalde, Hist. de la Chine (vol. 1, p. 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 444, 445, 446, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 455, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492, 493, 494, 495, 496, 497, 498, 499, 500, 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510, 511, 512, 513, 514, 515, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 523, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528, 529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 546, 547, 548, 549, 550, 551, 552, 553, 554, 555, 556, 557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 582, 583, 584, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600, 601, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607, 608, 609, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, 618, 619, 620, 621, 622, 623, 624, 625, 626, 627, 628, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 639, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 645, 646, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 705, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710, 711, 712, 713, 714, 715, 716, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, 725, 726, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 732, 733, 734, 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743, 744, 745, 746, 747, 748, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755, 756, 757, 758, 759, 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766, 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 772, 773, 774, 775, 776, 777, 778, 779, 780, 781, 782, 783, 784, 785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 790, 791, 792, 793, 794, 795, 796, 797, 798, 799, 800, 801, 802, 803, 804, 805, 806, 807, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812, 813, 814, 815, 816, 817, 818, 819, 820, 821, 822, 823, 824, 825, 826, 827, 828, 829, 830, 831, 832, 833, 834, 835, 836, 837, 838, 839, 840, 841, 842, 843, 844, 845, 846, 847, 848, 849, 850, 851, 852, 853, 854, 855, 856, 857, 858, 859, 860, 861, 862, 863, 864, 865, 866, 867, 868, 869, 870, 871, 872, 873, 874, 875, 876, 877, 878, 879, 880, 881, 882, 883, 884, 885, 886, 887, 888, 889, 890, 891, 892, 893, 894, 895, 896, 897, 898, 899, 900, 901, 902, 903, 904, 905, 906, 907, 908, 909, 910, 911, 912, 913, 914, 915, 916, 917, 918, 919, 920, 921, 922, 923, 924, 925, 926, 927, 928, 929, 930, 931, 932, 933, 934, 935, 936, 937, 938, 939, 940, 941, 942, 943, 944, 945, 946, 947, 948, 949, 950, 951, 952, 953, 954, 955, 956, 957, 958, 959, 960, 961, 962, 963, 964, 965, 966, 967, 968, 969, 970, 971, 972, 973, 974, 975, 976, 977, 978, 979, 980, 981, 982, 983, 984, 985, 986, 987, 988, 989, 990, 991, 992, 993, 994, 995, 996, 997, 998, 999, 1000).

CHAP.
LXV.

His triumph at Samarcand,
A. D. 1406,
July—
A. D. 1405,
January 8.

On the throne of Samarcand,* he displayed, in a short repose, his magnificence and power; listened to the complaints of the people; distributed a just measure of rewards and punishments; employed his riches in the architecture of palaces and temples; and gave audience to the ambassadors of Egypt, Arabia, India, Tartary, Russia, and Spain, the last of whom presented a suit of tapestry which eclipsed the pencil of the Oriental artists. The marriage of six of the emperor's grandsons was esteemed an act of religion as well as of paternal tenderness; and the pomp of the ancient caliphs was revived in their nuptials. They were celebrated in the gardens of Canighul, decorated with innumerable tents and pavilions, which displayed the luxury of a great city and the spoils of a victorious camp. Whole forests were cut down to supply fuel for the kitchens; the plain was spread with pyramids of meat, and vases of every liquor, to which thousands of guests were courteously invited: the orders of the state, and the nations of the earth, were marshalled at the royal banquet; nor were the ambassadors of Europe (says the haughty Persian) excluded from the feast; since even the casser, the smallest of fish, find their place in the ocean.† The public

* For the return, triumph, and death, of Timur, see Shereffeddin (l. vi, c. 4-38) and Arakchah tom. 2, c. 35-47.

† Shereffeddin (l. vi, c. 24) mentions the submission of one of the most potent sovereigns of Europe. We know that it was Henry VII. king of Castile; and the curious relation of his two embassies is still extant.

Joy was testified by illuminations and masquerades; the trades of Samarraud passed in review; and every trade was emulous to execute some quaint device, some marvellous pageant, with the materials of their peculiar art. After the marriage-contracts had been ratified by the caillis, the bridegrooms and their brides retired to the nuptial chambers; nine times, according to the Asiatic fashion, they were dressed and undressed; and at each change of apparel, pearls and rubies were showered on their heads, and contemptuously abandoned to their attendants. A general indulgence was proclaimed: every law was relaxed, every pleasure was allowed, the people was free, the sovereign was idle; and the historian of Tinnour may remark, that, after devoting fifty years to the attainment of empire, the only happy period of his life were the two months in which he ceased to exercise his power. But he was soon awakened to the cares of government and war. The standard was unfurled for the invasion of China: the emirs made their report of two hundred thousand, the select and veteran soldiers of Iran and Touran; their baggage and provisions were transported by five hundred great waggons, and an immense train of horses and camels: and the troops might prepare for a long absence, since more than six months were em-estates (Mariani, Hist. Hispan. l. xix. c. 11, tom. 1), p. 326, 331. Avertissement à l'Hist. de Tinnour Bar, p. 25-27. There appears likewise to have been some correspondence between the Mogul emperor and the court of Charles vii, King of France (Histoire de France, par Voltaire et Villaret, tom. xii, p. 356).

CHAP.
LXV.

His death
on the road to China,
A. D. 1405,
April 1.

played in the tranquil journey of a caravan from Samarcand to Pekin. Neither age, nor the severity of the winter, could retard the impatience of Timour; he mounted on horseback, passed the Sihnan on the ice, marched seventy-six parasangs, three hundred miles, from his capital, and pitched his last camp in the neighbourhood of Otrar, where he was expected by the angel of death. Fatigue, and the indiscreet use of iced water accelerated the progress of his fever; and the conqueror of Asia expired in the seventieth year of his age; thirty-five years after he had ascended the throne of Zagatal. His designs were lost; his armies were disbanded; China was saved; and fourteen years after his decease, the most powerful of his children sent an embassy of friendship and commerce to the court of Pekin.*

Character
and merits
of Timour.

The fame of Timour has pervaded the East and West; his posterity is still invested with the imperial title; and the admiration of his subjects, who revered him almost as a deity, may be justified, in some degree, by the praise or confession of his bitterest enemies.† Although he was lame of an hand and foot, his form and stature were not unworthy of his rank; and his vigorous health, so essential to himself and to the world,

* See the translation of the Persian account of their embassy, a curious and original piece (in the fourth part of the Relation de Tamerlan). They presented the emperor of China with an old horse which Timour had formerly rode. It was in the year 1319 that they departed from the court of Herat, in which place they returned in 1422 from Pekin.

† From Arabshah, tom. ii. c. 89. The weight of silver columns are borrowed from Sherardian, d'Herbelot, and the Institution.

was corroborated by temperance and exercise. In his familiar discourse he was grave and modest, and if he was ignorant of the Arabic language, he spoke, with fluency and elegance, the Persian and Turkish idioms. It was his delight to converse with the learned on topics of history and science; and the amusement of his leisure hours was the game of chess, which he improved, or corrupted, with new refinements.<sup>2</sup> In his religion, he was a zealous, though not perhaps an orthodox, mussulman;<sup>3</sup> but his sound understanding may tempt us to believe, that a superstitious reverence for omens and prophecies, for saints and astrologers, was only affected as an instrument of policy. In the government of a vast empire, he stood alone and absolute, without a rebel to oppose his power, a favourite to seduce his affections, or a minister to mislead his judgment. It was his firmest maxim, that whatever might be the consequence, the word of the prince should never be disputed or recalled; but his foes have maliciously observed, that the commands of anger and destruction were more strictly executed than those of beneficence and favour. His sons and grandsons, of whom Timour left six-and-thirty at his decease, were his first and <sup>2</sup> His new system was multiplied from 32 pieces and 64 squares, to 48 pieces and 110 or 130 squares. But, except in his court, the old game has been thought sufficiently elaborate. The Royal emperor was rather pleased than hurt, with the victory of a soldier's chess-play; and will see the value of this argument!

<sup>3</sup> See, Herodotus, l. 3, c. 13, 14. Aristotle (Iam. l. c. 86, p. 801, 803) represents the jealousy of Timour and the Magians, who almost preferred to the kurran, the game, or art of Kings and their satellites; and will be believe that Aristotle had observed the art and subtlety of their pagan gods.

CHAP.
LXV.

most submissive subjects; and whenever they deviated from their duty, they were corrected, according to the laws of Zingis, with the bastonade, and afterwards restored to honour and command. Perhaps his heart was not devoid of the social virtues; perhaps he was not incapable of loving his friends, and pardoning his enemies; but the rules of morality are founded on the public interest; and it may be sufficient to applaud the wisdom of a monarch, for the liberality by which he is not impoverished, and for the justice by which he is strengthened and enriched. To maintain the harmony of authority and obedience, to chastise the proud, to protect the weak, to reward the deserving, to banish vice and illeness from his dominions, to secure the traveller and merchant, to restrain the depredations of the soldier, to cherish the labours of the husbandman, to encourage industry and learning, and, by an equal and moderate assessment, to increase the revenue, without increasing the taxes, are indeed the duties of a prince; but, in the discharge of these duties, he finds an ample and immediate recompense. Timour might boast, that, at his accession to the throne, Asia was the prey of anarchy and rapine, whilst under his prosperous monarchy a child, fearless and unhurt, might carry a purse of gold from the east to the west. Such was his confidence of merit, that from this reformation he derived excuse for his victories, and a title to universal dominion. The four following observations will serve to appreciate his claim to the public gratitude: and perhaps we shall conclude, that the Mogul emperor was rather the scourge than the benefactor of mankind. 1. If some partial disorders, some local oppressions, were healed by the sword of Tirmour, the remedy was far more pernicious than the disease. By their rapine, cruelty, and discord, the petty tyrants of Persia might afflict their subjects; but whole nations were crushed under the footsteps of the reformer. The ground which had been occupied by flourishing cities was often marked by his abominable trophies, by columns, or pyramids, of human heads. Astracan, Carizme, Delhi, Ispahan, Bagdad, Aleppo, Damascus, Boursa, Smyrna, and a thousand others, were sacked, or burnt, or utterly destroyed, in his presence, and by his troops; and perhaps his conscience would have been startled, if a priest or philosopher had dared to number the millions of victims whom he had sacrificed to the establishment of peace and order.* 2. His most destructive wars were rather inroads than conquests: He invaded Turkestan, Kipzak, Russia, Hindostan, Syria, Anatolia, Armenia, and Georgia, without a hope or a desire of preserving those distant provinces. From thence he departed, laden with spoil; but he left behind him neither troops to awe the contumacious, nor magistrates to protect the obedient, natives. When he had broken * Besides the bloody passages of this narrative, I must refer to an appropriation in the sixth volume of the Devine and Fati, which, in a single note (p. 56, note 13), accumulates near 300,000 heads of the monuments of his cruelty. Elmer in Rowe's play on the 6th of November, I did not expect to hear of Tirmour's visible destruction (White's postface, p. 7). Yet I can assure a generous enthusiasm in the reader, and still more in the editor, of the Justification.

CHAP.
LXV.

the fabric of their ancient government, he abandoned them to the evils which his invasion had aggravated or caused; nor were these evils compensated by any present or possible benefits. 3. The kingdoms of Transoxiana and Persia were the proper field which he laboured to cultivate and adorn, as the perpetual inheritance of his family. But his peaceful labours were often interrupted, and sometimes blasted, by the absence of the conqueror. While he triumphed on the Volga or the Ganges, his servants, and even his sons, forgot their master and their duty. The public and private injuries were poorly redressed by the tardy rigour of enquiry and punishment; and we must be content to praise the Institutions of Timour as the specious idea of a perfect monarchy. 4. Whatsoever might be the blessings of his administration, they evaporated with his life. To reign, rather than to govern, was the ambition of his children and grandchildren,* the enemies of each other and of the people. A fragment of the empire was upheld with some glory by Shirokh his youngest son; but after his decease, the scene was again involved in darkness and blood; and before the end of a century, Transoxiana and Persia were trampled by the Uzbeks from the north, and the Turkmenians of the black and white sheep. The race of Timour would have been extinct, if an hero, his descendant in the fifth degree, had not ded before the Uzbek arms to the conquest of Hindustan. His successors (the great Moguls)<sup>b</sup> extended their sway from the mountains of Cashmir to Cape Comorin, and from Candahar to the gulf of Bengal. Since the reign of Aurungzebe, their empire has been dissolved; their treasures of Delhi have been rifled by a Persian robber, and the richest of their kingdoms is now possessed by a company of christian merchants, of a remote island in the Northern ocean.

* Consult the last chapters of Sherifeddin and Arabshah, and M. de Guignes (Hist. des Huns, tom. iv, l. 21). Fraser's History of Nadir Shah, p. 1-42. The story of Timour's descendants is imperfectly told, and the second and third parts of Sherifeddin are unknown.

Far different was the fate of the Ottoman monarchy. The massy trunk was bent to the ground, but no sooner did the hurricane pass away, than it again rose with fresh vigour and more lively vegetation. When Timour, in every sense, had evacuated Anatolia, he left the cities without a palace, a treasure, or a king. The open country was overspread with hordes of shepherds and robbers of Tartar or Turkman origin; the recent conquests of Bajazet were restored to the emirs, one of whom, in base revenge, demolished his sepulchre; and his five sons were eager, by civil discord, to consume the remnant of their patrimony. I shall enumerate their names in the order of their age and actions.<sup>c</sup> 1. It is doubtful, whether I relate the story of the true Akko<sup>d</sup> pho, or of an impostor, who personated that lost

Civil wars
of the sons of Bajazet.
a. d. 1403-
1411.

1. Murad-
1441

<sup>b</sup> Shah Allum, the present Mogul, is in the fourteenth degree from Timour, by Miran Shah, his third son. See the second volume of Dow's History of Hindostan.

<sup>c</sup> The civil wars, from the death of Bajazet to that of Meschepa, are related according to the Turks. 1. Demetrios Constantinus ix. 32-33. Of the Greeks, Chakmactylus l. vi. and vii. Pluchius vi. 1, & 30-32, and Ducas c. 18-21; the last is the most copious and best informed.

CHAP.
LXV.

prince. He fought by his father's side in the battle of Angora; but when the captive sultan was permitted to inquire for his children, Mouza alone could be found; and the Turkish historians, the slaves of the triumphant faction, are persuaded that his brother was confounded among the slain. If Mestapha escaped from that disastrous field, he was concealed twelve years from his friends and enemies, till he emerged in Thessaly, and was hailed by a numerous party, as the son and successor of Bajazet. His first defeat would have been his last, had not the true, or false, Mustapha been saved by the Greeks, and restored, after the decease of his brother Mahomet, to liberty and empire. A degenerate mind seemed to argue his spurious birth; and if, on the throne of Adrianople, he was adored as the Ottoman sultan, his flight, his fetters, and an ignominious gibbet, delivered the impostor to popular contempt. A similar character and claim was asserted by several rival pretenders; thirty persons are said to have suffered under the name of Mustapha; and these frequent executions may perhaps insinuate, that the Turkish court was not perfectly secure of the death of the lawful prince. 2. After his father's captivity, Isak reigned for some time in the neighbourhood of Angora, Sinope, and the Black sea; and his ambassadors were dismissed from the presence of Timour with fair promises and honourable gifts. But their master was soon deprived of his province and life, by a jealous brother, the sovereign of Amasia; and the final event suggested a pious allusion, that the law of Moses and Jesus, of Isa and Moussa had been abrogated by the greater Mahomet. 3. Soliman is not numbered in the list of the Turkish emperors: yet he checked the victorious progress of the Moguls; and after their departure, united for a while the thrones of Adrianople and Boursa. In war he was brave, active, and unfortunate; his courage was softened by clemency; but it was likewise inflamed by presumption, and corrupted by intemperance and idleness. He relaxed the nerves of discipline, in a government where either the subject or the sovereign must continually tremble; his vices alienated the chiefs of the army and the law; and his daily drunkenness, so contemptible in a prince and a man, was doubly odious in a disciple of the prophet. In the slumber of intoxication he was surprised by his brother Moussa; and as he fled from Adrianople towards the Byzantine capital, Soliman was overtaken and slain in a bath, after a reign of seven years and ten months. 4. The investiture of Moussa degraded him as the slave of the Moguls: his tributary kingdom of Anatolia was confined within a narrow limit, nor could his broken militia and empty treasury contend with the hardy and veteran bands of the sovereign of Romania. Moussa fled in disguise from the palace of Boursa; traversed the Propontis in an open boat; wandered over the Wallachian and Servian hills; and after some vain attempts, ascended the throne of Adrianople, so recently stained with the blood of Soliman.

2. Isak

* Azadeh, tom. 6, p. 24, whose testimony on this occasion is weighty and valuable. The existence of Isak (known to the Turks) is likewise confirmed by Sherifeddin G. i, p. 57.

CHAP.
LXV.3. Soliman,
A. D. 1403-
1410.3. Moussa,
A. D. 1410.

CHAP. In a reign of three years and a half, his troops
 LXV. were victorious against the christians of Hungary
 ..... and the Morea; but Mousa was ruined by his timorous disposition and unseasonable clemency.
 After resigning the sovereignty of Anatolia, he fell a victim to the perfidy of his ministers, and the superior ascendant of his brother Mahomet.

5. Maho- 5. The final victory of Mahomet was the just met's re- recompence of his prudence and moderation.
 2nd t. Before his father's captivity, the royal youth had
 4. p. 1412- been entrusted with the government of Amasia, 1421. thirty days journey from Constantinople, and the Turkish frontier against the christians of Trebizond and Georgia. The castle, in Asiatic warfare, was esteemed impregnable; and the city of Amasia,* which is equally divided by the river
 Iris, rises on either side in the form of an amphitheatre, and represents on a smaller scale the image of Bagdad. In his rapid career, Timour appears to have overlooked this obscure and contumacious angle of Anatolia; and Mahomet, without provoking the conqueror, maintained his silent independence, and chased from the province the last stragglers of the Tartar host. He relieved himself from the dangerous neighbourhood of Isa; but in the contests of their more powerful brethren, his firm neutrality was respected; till, after the triumph of Mousa, he stood forth the heir and avenger of the unfortunate Soliman.
 Mahomet obtained Anatolia by treaty, and Romania by arms; and the soldier who presented him

* Amischni, loc. citat. Abulfeda, Geograph. tab. xlii. p. 307.
 Busbequius, epist. l. p. 96, 97, in Itinere C. P. et Amasiane.

with the head of Mousa, was rewarded as the benefactor of his king and country. The eight years of his sole and peaceful reign were usefully employed in banishing the vices of civil discord, and restoring on a firmer basis the fabric of the Ottoman monarchy. His last care was the choice of two vizirs, Bajazet and Ibrahim,* who might guide the youth of his son Amurath; and such was their union and prudence, that they concealed above forty days the emperor's death, till the arrival of his successor in the palace of Bourza. A new war was kindled in Europe by the prince, or impostor, Mastapha; the first vizir lost his army and his head; but the more fortunate Ibrahim, whose name and family are still revered, extinguished the last pretender to the throne of Bajazet, and closed the scene of domestic hostility.

CHAP.
LXV.

Reign of Amurath II.
A. D. 1441-1446,
Feb. 8.

In these conflicts, the wisest Turks, and indeed the body of the nation, were strongly attached to the unity of the empire; and Romania and Anatolia, so often torn asunder by private ambition, were animated by a strong and invincible tendency of cohesion. Their efforts might have instructed the christian powers; and had they occupied with a confederate fleet the straits of Gallipoli, the Ottomans, at least in Europe, must have been speedily annihilated. But the schism of the West, and the factions and wars of France and England, diverted the Latins from this generous enterprise:

Re-union
of the Ottoman empire,
A. D. 1451.

* The virtues of Ibrahim are praised by a contemporary Greek (Ducas, c. 25). His descendants are the sole nobles in Turkey: they employ themselves with the administration of his pious foundations, are excluded from public offices, and receive two annual visits from the sultan (Cassanovi, p. 76).

CHAP.
LXV.

they enjoyed the present respite, without a thought of futurity; and were often tempted by a momentary interest to serve the common enemy of their religion. A colony of Genoese,* which had been planted at Phocæa† on the Ionian coast, was enriched by the lucrative monopoly of alum;‡ and their tranquillity under the Turkish empire was secured by the annual payment of tribute. In the last civil war of the Ottomans, the Genoese governor, Adorno, a bold and ambitious youth, embraced the party of Amurat; and undertook, with seven stout galleys, to transport him from Asia to Europe. The sultan and five hundred guards embarked on board the admiral's ship, which was manned by eight hundred of the bravest Franks. His life and liberty were in their hands; nor can we, without reluctance, applaud the fidelity of Adorno, who, in the midst of the passage, knelt before him, and gratefully accepted a discharge of his arrears of tribute.

* See Pauthier (l. i. c. 19), Niebuhr's Grecians (l. ii. c. 1), Sherfield's (l. v. c. 31), and Ducas (c. 23). The last of these, a curious and useful observer, is entitled, from his birth and station, to particular credit in all that concerns Asia and the islands. Among the notices that occurred in New Phœcia, he mentions the English (Ayyas) : an early evidence of Mediterranean trade.

† For the spirit of navigation, and freedom of ancient Phœcia, or rather of the Phœnicians, consult the first book of Herodotus, and the Geographical Index of his last and learned French translator, M. Larcher (tom. 13, p. 292).

‡ Phœcia is not enumerated by Pliney (Hist. Nat. xxv. 57) among the places productive of alum; he reckons Egypt as the first, and for the second the Isle of Rhodes, whose alum mines are described by Tournefort (tom. i. lettre 10), a traveller and a naturalist. After the loss of Phœcia, the Genoese, in 1469, found that useful mineral in the Isle of Sicily (Almoad, Bonifand, ad Duran, l. 25).

They landed in sight of Mustapha and Gallipoli; two thousand Italians, armed with lances and battle-axes, attended Amurath to the conquest of Adrianople; and this naval service was soon repaid by the ruin of the commerce and colony of Phocæa.

If Timour had generously marched at the request and to the relief of the Greek emperor, he might be entitled to the praise and gratitude of the christians.<sup>1</sup> But a mussulman, who carried into Georgia the sword of persecution, and respected the holy warfare of Bajazet, was not disposed to pity or succour the idolaters of Europe. The Tartar followed the impulse of ambition; and the deliverance of Constantinople was the accidental consequence. When Manuel abdicated the government, it was his prayer, rather than his hope, that the ruin of the church and state might be delayed beyond his unhappy days; and after his return from a western pilgrimage, he expected every hour the news of the sad catastrophe. On a sudden, he was astonished and rejoiced by the intelligence of the retreat, the overthrow, and the captivity of the Ottoman. Manuel im-

<sup>1</sup> The writer who has most abused this fabulous generosity is our ingenious Sir William Temple (his works, vol. iii, p. 342, 350, octavo edition), that lover of exotic virtue. After the conquest of Russia, he, and the passage of the Danube, his Tartar hero delivers, yields, admires, and refuses, the city of Constantinople. His glowing pencil deviates in every line from the truth of history; yet his glowing fictions are more excusable than the gross errors of Cantemir.

<sup>2</sup> For the reigns of Manuel and John, of Michael VIII, and Amurath II, see the Ottoman History of Cantemir (p. 70-73), and the three Greeks, Chalcandyles, Phrantzæ, and Ducæ, who all are superior to his rivals.

CHAP.
LXV.

mediately sailed from Modon in the Morea; ascended the throne of Constantinople; and dismissed his blind competitor to an easy exile in the isle of Lesbos. The ambassadors of the son of Bajazet were soon introduced to his presence; but their pride was fallen, their tone was modest; they were awed by the just apprehension, lest the Greeks should open to the Moguls the gates of Europe. Soliman saluted the emperor by the name of father; solicited at his hands the government or gift of Romania; and promised to deserve his favour by inviolable friendship, and the restitution of Thessalonica, with the most important places along the Strymon, the Propontiz, and the Black sea. The alliance of Soliman exposed the emperor to the enmity and revenge of Mourza; the Turks appeared in arms before the gates of Constantinople; but they were repulsed by sea and land; and unless the city was guarded by some foreign mercenaries, the Greeks must have wondered at their own triumph. But, instead of prolonging the division of the Ottoman powers, the policy or passion of Manuel was tempted to assist the most formidable of the sons of Bajazet. He concluded a treaty with Mahomet, whose progress was checked by the insuperable barrier of Gallipoli: the sultan and his troops were transported over the Bosphorus; he was hospitably entertained in the capital; and his successful sally was the first step to the conquest of Romania. The ruin was suspended by the prudence and moderation of the conqueror; he faithfully discharged his own obligations and those of Soliman, respected the laws of gratitude and peace; and left the emperor guardian of his two younger sons, in the vain hope of saving them from the jealous cruelty of their brother Amurath. But the execution of his last testament would have offended the national honour and religion; and the divan unanimously pronounced, that the royal youths should never be abandoned to the custody and education of a christian dog. On this refusal, the Byzantine councils were divided; but the age and caution of Mammel yielded to the presumption of his son John; and they unsheathed a dangerous weapon of revenge, by dismissing the true or false Mustapha, who had long been detained as a captive and hostage, and for whose maintenance they received an annual pension of three hundred thousand aspers.* At the door of his prison, Mustapha subscribed to every proposal; and the keys of Gallipoli, or rather of Europe, were stipulated as the price of his deliverance. But no sooner was he seated on the throne of Romania, than he dismissed the Greek ambassadors with a smile of contempt, declaring, in a pious tone, that, at the day of judgment, he would rather answer for the violation of an oath, than for the surrender of a mussulman city into the hands of the infidels. The emperor was at once the enemy of the two rivals; from whom he had sustained,

* The Turkish asper (from the Greek ασπερ is, or was, a piece of white or silver money, at present much debased, but which was formerly equivalent to the fifty-fourth part, at least, of a Venetian ducat or sequin) and the 300,000 aspers, a jointury allowance or royal tribute, may be compared at £1000 sterling (Louches). Pindart. Tabl. p. 406-408.

CHAP.
LXV.

and to whom he had offered, an injury; and the victory of Amurath was followed, in the ensuing spring, by the siege of Constantinople.*

Siege of Constantinople by Amurath
II.
A. D. 1422.
June 10.
August 24.

The religious merit of subduing the city of the Cæsars attracted from Asia a crowd of volunteers, who aspired to the crown of martyrdom: their military ardour was inflamed by the promise of rich spoils and beautiful females; and the sultan's ambition was consecrated by the presence and prediction of Seid Bechar, a descendant of the prophet,† who arrived in the camp, on a mule, with a venerable train of five hundred disciples. But he might blush, if a fanatic could blush, at the failure of his assurances. The strength of the walls resisted an army of two hundred thousand Turks: their assaults were repelled by the sallies of the Greeks and their foreign mercenaries; the old resources of defence were opposed to the new engines of attack; and the enthusiasm of the dervish, who was snatched to heaven in visionary converse with Mahomet, was answered by the credulity of the christians, who beheld the virgin Mary, in a violet garment, walking on the rampart and animating their courage.‡ After a siege of two months, Amurath was recalled to Boursa by a domestic revolt,

* For the siege of Constantinople in 1422, see the particulars and contemporary narrative of Jean Caninus, published by Leo Allatius, at the end of his edition of Acropolita (p. 176-179).

† Canemir, p. 80. Caninus, who describes Seid Bechar without naming him, supposes that the friend of Mahomet assumed to himself the privilege of a prophet, and that the fairest of the Greek girls were promised to the saint and his disciples.

‡ For this miraculous apparition, Caninus appeals to the immortal saint; but who will bear testimony for Seid Bechar?

which had been kindled by Greek treachery, and was soon extinguished by the death of a guiltless brother. While he led his janizaries to new conquests in Europe and Asia, the Byzantine empire was indulged in a servile and precarious respite of thirty years. Manuel sunk into the grave, and John Palaeologus was permitted to reign, for an annual tribute of three hundred thousand aspers, and the dereliction of almost all that he held beyond the suburbs of Constantinople.

In the establishment and restoration of the Turkish empire, the first merit must doubtless be assigned to the personal qualities of the sultans; since, in human life, the most important scenes will depend on the character of a single actor. By some shades of wisdom and virtue, they may be discriminated from each other; but, except in a single instance, a period of nine reigns and two hundred and sixty-five years is occupied, from the elevation of Othman to the death of Soliman, by a rare series of warlike and active princes, who impressed their subjects with obedience and their enemies with terror. Instead of the slothful luxury of the seraglio, the heirs of royalty were educated in the council and the field; from early youth they were entrusted by their fathers with the command of provinces and armies; and this manly institution, which was often productive of civil war, must have essentially contributed to the discipline and vigour of the monarchy. The Ottomans cannot style themselves, like the Arabian caliphs, the descendants or successors of the apostle of God; and the

CHAP.
LXV.

The emperor John Palaeologus reigned

A. D. 1425,
July 21-
A. D. 1448,
October 31.

Hereditary monarchy of the OT-TOMANS.

CHAP.
LXV.

kindred which they claim with the Tartar khans of the house of Zingis appears to be founded in flattery, rather than in truth.<sup>2</sup> Their origin is obscure; but their sacred and indefensible right, which no time can erase and no violence can infringe, was soon and unalterably implanted in the minds of their subjects. A weak or vicious sultan may be deposed and strangled; but his inheritance devolves to an infant or an idiot; nor has the most daring rebel presumed to ascend the throne of his lawful sovereign.<sup>3</sup> While the transient dynasties of Asia have been continually subverted by a crafty vizir in the palace, or a victorious general in the camp, the Ottoman succession has been confirmed by the practice of five centuries; and is now incorporated with the vital principle of the Turkish nation.

Eloquent and dark piece of the Tartars.

To the spirit and constitution of that nation, a strong and singular influence may however be ascribed. The primitive subjects of Othman were the four hundred families of wandering Turkmans, who had followed his ancestors from the Oxus to the Sangar; and the plains of Anatolia are still covered with the white and black tents of their rustic brethren. But this original drop was dissolved in the mass of voluntary and vanquished CHAP.

<sup>2</sup> See RICHARD II. l. c. 13. The Turkish sultans assume the title of Khan. Yet Abulghazi is ignorant of his Ottoman custom.

<sup>3</sup> The chief grand vizir of the name of Kinikli, who was slain at the battle of Salomon in 1691 (Constantinople, p. 222), presumed to say, that all the successors of Soliman had been fools or tyrants, and that it was time to abolish the race (Marquis de Maffei, &c. p. 28). This political treatise was a good whig, and justified against the French ambassador the resolution of England (Mignet, Hist. Ottomane, tom. iii. p. 474). His presumption condemns the singular exception of continuing officers to the same family.

LXV.
 subjects, who, under the name of Turks, are united by the common ties of religion, language, and manners. In the cities, from Erzeroum to Belgrade, that national appellation is common to all the Moslems, the first and most honourable inhabitants; but they have abandoned, at least in Romania, the villages and the cultivation of the land to the christian peasants. In the vigorous age of the Ottonian government, the Turks were themselves excluded from all civil and military honours; and a servile class, an artificial people, was raised by the discipline of education to obey, to conquer, and to command.* From the time of Orchan and the first Ammirath, the sultans were persuaded that a government of the sword must be renewed in each generation with new soldiers; and that such soldiers must be sought, not in effeminate Asia, but among the hardy and warlike natives of Europe. The provinces of Thence, Macedonia, Albania, Bulgaria, and Servia, became the perpetual seminary of the Turkish army; and when the royal fifth of the captives was diminished by conquest, an inhuman tax of the fifth child, or of every fifth year, was rigorously levied on the christian families. At the age of twelve or fourteen years, the most robust youths were torn from their parents; their names were enrolled in a book; and from that moment they were clothed, taught, and maintained, for the public service. According to the promise of their appearance, they were selected for the royal schools of Boursa, Pera, and Adrianople, entrusted to the care of the bashaws, or dispersed in the houses of the Anatolian peasantry. It was the first care of their masters to instruct them in the Turkish language: their bodies were exercised by every labour that could fortify their strength; they learned to wrestle, to leap, to run, to shoot with the bow, and afterwards with the musket; till they were drafted into the chambers and companies of the janizaries, and severely trained in the military or monastic discipline of the order. The youths most conspicuous for birth, talents, and beauty, were admitted into the inferior class of agiamoglans, or the more liberal rank of ichoglans, of whom the former were attached to the palace, and the latter to the person of the prince. In four successive schools, under the rod of the white eunuchs, the arts of horsemanship and of darting the javelin were their daily exercise, while those of a more studious cast applied themselves to the study of the koran, and the knowledge of the Arabic and Persian tongues. As they advanced in seniority and merit, they were gradually dismissed to military, civil, and even ecclesiastical employments: the longer their stay, the higher was their expectation; till, at a mature period, they were admitted into the number of the forty agas, who stood before the sultan, and were promoted by his choice to the government of provinces and the first honours of the empire.<sup>1</sup> Such a mode of institution was admirably adapted to the form and spirit of a despotic monarchy. The ministers and generals were, in the strictest sense, the slaves of the emperor, to whose bounty they were indebted for their instruction and support. When they left the seraglio, and suffered their beards to grow as the symbol of enfranchisement, they found themselves in an important office, without faction or friendship, without parents and without heirs, dependent on the hand which had raised them from the dust, and which, on the slightest displeasure, could break in pieces these statues of glass, as they are aptly termed by the Turkish proverb.<sup>2</sup> In the slow and painful steps of education, their character and talents were unfolded to a discerning eye: the man, naked and alone, was reduced to the standard of his personal merit; and, if the sovereign had wisdom to chuse, he possessed a pure and boundless liberty of choice. The Ottoman candidates were trained by the virtues of abstinence to those of action; by the habits of submission to those of command. A similar spirit was diffused among the troops; and their silence and sobriety, their patience and modesty, have extorted the reluc-

* Chalmers (l. v.) and Ducas (p. 22) exhibit the cruel illustrations of the Ottoman policy, and the transportation of christian children into Turkish soldiers.

CHAP.
LXV.

<sup>1</sup> This sketch of the Turkish education and discipline is chiefly borrowed from Bionet's State of the Ottoman empire, the State Militaire de l'Empire Ottoman of Count Maréchal (in Hayn, 1722, in Italian), and a Description of the Seraglio, approved by Mr. Grose himself, a curious traveller, and inserted in the second volume of his works.

<sup>2</sup> From the series of 112 slaves till the age of 5 years (Maréchal, p. 15) their place may be valued at three years and a half purchase.

CHAP.
LXV.

tant praise of their christian enemies.* Nor can the victory appear doubtful, if we compare the discipline and exercise of the janizaries with the pride of birth, the independence of chivalry, the ignorance of the new levies, the mutinous temper of the veterans, and the vices of intemperance and disorder, which so long contaminated the armies of Europe.

Invention and use of gunpowder.

The only hope of salvation for the Greek empire and the adjacent kingdoms, would have been some more powerful weapon, some discovery in the art of war, that should give them a decisive superiority over their Turkish foes. Such a weapon was in their hands; such a discovery had been made in the critical moment of their fate. The chemists of China or Europe had found, by casual or elaborate experiments, that a mixture of saltpetre, sulphur, and charcoal, produces, with a spark of fire, a tremendous explosion. It was soon observed, that if the expansive force were compressed in a strong tube, a ball of stone or iron might be expelled with irresistible and destructive velocity. The precise era of the invention and application of gunpowder<sup>7</sup> is involved in doubtful traditions and equivocal language; yet we may clearly discern, that it was known before the middle of the fourteenth century; and that before the end of the same, the use of artillery in battles and sieges, by sea and land, was familiar to the states of Germany, Italy, Spain, France, and England.* The priority of nations is of small account; none could derive any exclusive benefit from their previous or superior knowledge; and in the common improvement they stood on the same level of relative power and military science. Nor was it possible to circumscribe the secret within the pale of the church; it was disclosed to the Turks by the treachery of apostates and the selfish policy of rivals; and the sultans had sense to adopt, and wealth to reward, the talents of a christian engineer. The Genoese, who transported Amurat into Europe, must be accused as his preceptors; and it was probably by their hands that his cannon was cast and directed at the siege of Constantinople.† The first attempt was indeed unsuccessful; but in the general warfare of the age, the advantage was on their side, who were most commonly the assailants: for a while the proportion of the attack and defence was suspended; and this thundering

* See the entertaining and judicious letter of Buoquoins.

<sup>7</sup> The first and second volumes of Dr. Watson's Chemical Essays contain two valuable discourses on the discovery and composition of gunpowder.

* On this subject, modern testimonies cannot be trusted. The original passages are collected by Durrant (Gloss. Latin. tom. i, p. 473, Recherches). But in the early disorderly lights, the terms, sound, fire, and effort, that seem to express sea artillery, may be fairly interpreted of the old engines and the Greek fire. For the English cannon at Greys, the authority of John Villani (Chron. l. vii, c. 83) must be weighed against the silence of Froissart. Yet Muratori (Antiquit. Ital. medii ævi, tom. ii, Dissert. xvi, p. 514, 515) has produced a decisive passage from Petrarch (de Remedis utriusque Fortune Dialog.), who, before the year 1344, estimates this martial thunder, super terrâ, super circumis.

† The Turkish cannon, which Ducas (c. 37) first introduced before Belgrade &c. in 1436, is mentioned by Chalcondyles (l. i, p. 123) in 1422, at the siege of Constantinople.

CHAP.

LXV.

artillery was pointed against the walls and towers which had been erected only to resist the less potent engines of antiquity. By the Venetians, the use of gunpowder was communicated without reproach to the sultans of Egypt and Persia, their allies against the Ottoman power; the secret was soon propagated to the extremities of Asia; and the advantage of the European was confined to his easy victories over the savages of the new world. If we contrast the rapid progress of this mischievous discovery with the slow and laborious advances of reason, science, and the arts of peace, a philosopher, according to his temper, will laugh or weep at the folly of mankind.

CHAP. LXVI.

Applications of the eastern emperors to the popes.—

Visits to the West, of John the first, Manuel, and John the second, Palæologus.—Union of the Greek and Latin churches, promoted by the council of Basil, and concluded at Ferrara and Florence.—State of literature at Constantinople.—Its revival in Italy by the Greek fugitives.—Curiosity and emulation of the Latins.

IN the four last centuries of the Greek emperors, their friendly or hostile aspect towards the pope and the Latins may be observed as the thermometer of their prosperity or distress, as the scale of the rise and fall of the barbarian dynasties. When the Turks of the house of Seljuk pervaded Asia, and threatened Constantinople, we have seen, at the council of Placentia, the suppliant ambassadors of Alexis imploring the protection of the common father of the christians. No sooner had the arms of the French pilgrims removed the sultan from Nice to Iconium, than the Greek princes resumed, or avowed, their genuine hatred and contempt for the schismatics of the West, which precipitated the first downfall of their empire. The date of the Mogul invasion is marked in the soft and charitable language of John Vataces. After the recovery of Constantinople, the throne of the

CHAP.
LXVI.

Embassy of the younger Andronicus to pope Benedict
xii.
A. D. 1338.

CHAP.
LXVI

first Palæologus was encompassed by foreign and domestic enemies; as long as the sword of Charles was suspended over his head he basely courted the favour of the Roman pontiff, and sacrificed to the present danger his faith, his virtue, and the affection of his subjects. On the decease of Michael, the prince and people asserted the independence of the church and the purity of their creed: the elder Andronicus neither feared nor loved the Latins: in his last distress pride was the safeguard of superstition; nor could he decently retract in his age the firm and orthodox declarations of his youth. His grandson, the younger Andronicus, was less a slave in his temper and situation; and the conquest of Bithynia by the Turks admonished him to seek a temporal and spiritual alliance with the Western princes. After a separation and silence of fifty years, a secret agent, the monk Barlaam, was dispatched to pope Benedict the twelfth; and his artful instructions appear to have been drawn by the master-hand of the great domestic.* "Most holy father," was he commissioned to say, "the emperor is not less desirous than yourself of an union between the two churches: but in this delicate transaction, he is obliged to respect his own dignity and the prejudices of his subjects. The ways of

The arguments for a crusade
and union.

* This curious instruction was transcribed (I believe) from the Vatican archive, by Odoricus Raynaldus, in his Continuation of the Annals of Harpinus (Rome, 1616-1677, in ten volumes in folio). I have contented myself with the abbe Fleury (Hist. Ecclesiastique, tom. XL, p. 1-20), whose abstracts I have always found to be clear, accurate, and impartial.

" union are two-fold; force and persuasion. Of CHAP.
 " force, the inefficacy has been already tried; LXVI.
 " since the Latins have subdued the empire, with" out subduing the minds, of the Greeks. The " method of persuasion, though slow, is sure and " permanent. A deputation of thirty or forty of " our doctors would probably agree with those of " the Vatican, in the love of truth and the unity " of belief, but on their return, what would be the
 " use, the recompense of such agreement? the " scorn of their brethren, and the reproaches of a " blind and obstinate nation. Yet that nation is " accustomed to reverence the general councils,
 " which have fixed the articles of our faith; and " if they reprobate the decrees of Lyons, it is be" cause the Eastern churches were neither heard " nor represented in that arbitrary meeting. For " this salutary end, it will be expedient, and even " necessary, that a well-chosen legate should be " sent into Greece, to convene the patriarchs of " Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, and Je" rusalem; and, with their aid, to prepare a free
 " and universal synod. But at this moment," continued the subtle agent, " the empire is assault" ed and endangered by the Turks, who have " occupied four of the greatest cities in Anatolia.
 " The christian inhabitants have expressed a wish
 " of returning to their allegiance and religion;
 " but the forces and revenues of the emperor are " insufficient for their deliverance; and the Ro" man legate must be accompanied, or preceded,
 " by an army of Franks, to expel the infidels, and " open a way to the holy sepulchre." If the suspicious Latins should require some pledge,

CHAP.
XXVI.

some previous effect of the sincerity of the Greeks, the answers of Barlaam were perspicuous and rational. " 1. A general synod can alone consummate the union of the churches; nor can such a synod be held till the three Oriental patriarchs, and a great number of bishops, are enfranchised from the mahometan yoke. 2. The Greeks are alienated by a long series of oppression and injury: they must be reconciled by some act of brotherly love, some effectual succour, which may fortify the authority and arguments of the emperor, and the friends of the union. 3. If some difference of faith or ceremonies should be found incurable, the Greeks however are the disciples of Christ; and the Turks are the common enemies of the christian name. The Armenians, Cyprians, and Rhodians, are equally attacked; and it will become the piety of the French prince to draw their swords in the general defence of religion. 4. Should the subjects of Andronicus be treated as the worst of schismatics, of heretics, of pagans, a judicious policy may yet instruct the powers of the West to embrace an useful ally, to uphold a sinking empire, to guard the confines of Europe; and rather to join the Greeks against the Turks, than to expect the union of the Turkish arms with the troops and treasures of captive Greece." The reasons, the offers, and the demands, of Andronicus, were eluded with cold and stately indifference. The kings of France and Naples declined the dangers and glory of a crusade: the pope refused to call a new synod to determine old articles of faith; and his regard for the obsolete claims of the Latin emperor and clergy engaged him to use an offensive superscription; "To the emperor" of the Greeks, and the persons who style themselves the patriarchs of the Eastern churches." For such an embassy, a time and character less propitious could not easily have been found. Benedict the twelfth was a dull peasant, perplexed with scruples, and immersed in sloth and wine: his pride might enrich with a third crown the papal tiara, but he was alike unfit for the regal and the pastoral office.

After the decease of Andronicus, while the Greeks were distracted by intestine war, they could not presume to agitate a general union of the christians. But as soon as Cantacruzen had subdued and pardoned his enemies, he was anxious to justify, or at least to extenuate, the introduction of the Turks into Europe, and the nuptials of his daughter with a mussulman prince.

Negociation of Cantacruzen with Clement VI. 1345.

<sup>1</sup> The antiquity of this title is happy arrangement: and ambasciatore, as is anonymous to crates, gubernator, is a word of classical, and even Ciceronian, authority, which may be found, not in the Glossary of Dacourge, but in the Thesaurus of Robert Stephani.

* The first speech upon the trial of Petrarch exposes the dangers of the Turk, and the incapacity of the pope. His later, then multiplied, were graviter, superflue, in re peritiosa, periphrastice, multum, summatim, peritiosa peritiosa, etque tulleianis modis edita. . . . . Hec quanta foliis patre terga subiectis aratro, quam scilicet pateternis accensibus. This satire engages his biographer to weigh the virtues and vices of Boccaccio, which have been exaggerated by Guicciardi and Whistons: by popes and protestants (see Memoires sur la Vie de Petrarche, tome 1, p. 150, li. vol. xv, p. 12-105). He gave occasion to the saying, Boccaccio populi.

Two officers of state, with a Latin interpreter, were sent in his name to the Roman court, which was transplanted to Avignon, on the banks of the Rhone, during a period of seventy years: they represented the hard necessity which had urged him to embrace the alliance of the miscreants, and pronounced by his command the specious and edifying sounds of union and crusade. Pope Clement the sixth,* the successor of Benedict, received them with hospitality and honour, acknowledged the innocence of their sovereign, excused his distress, applauded his magnanimity, and displayed a clear knowledge of the state and revolutions of the Greek empire, which he had imbibed from the honest accounts of a Savoyard lady, an attendant of the empress Anne.<sup>2</sup> If Clement was ill endowed with the virtues of a priest, he possessed however the spirit and magnificence of a prince, whose liberal hand distributed benefices and kingdoms with equal facility. Under his reign Avignon was the seat of pomp and pleasure; in his youth he had surpassed the licentiousness of a baron; and the palace, nay, the bed-chamber of the pope, was adorned, or polluted, by the visits of his female favourites. The wars of France and England were adverse to the holy enterprise; but his vanity was amused by the splendid idea; and the Greek ambassadors returned with two Latin bishops, the ministers of the pontiff. On their arrival at Constantinople the emperor and the nuncios admired each other's piety and eloquence; and their frequent conferences were filled with mutual praises and promises, by which both parties were amused, and neither could be deceived. "I am delighted," said the devout Cantacuzene, "with the project

* See the original lives of Clement vi. in Muratori Script. rerum Italianarum, tom. iii. p. 11, p. 230-239; Martin Villani (Chron. l. iii. c. 43, in Muratori, tom. iiv. p. 103), who styles him, multo cavalatissimo, poco religioso; Fleury (Hist. Eccles. tom. xv. p. 179); and the Vie de Pierre de Luxembourg, li. p. 42-43. This abbe de Salis treats him with the most indulgence; but he is a gentleman as well as a priest.

<sup>2</sup> Her name (most probably corrupted) was Xanxen. She had accompanied, and alone remained with her mistress at Constantinople, where her prudence, erudition, and politeness, deserved the praise of the Greeks themselves (Contarini l. i. c. 12).

 " of our holy war, which must redound to my " personal glory as well as to the public benefit " of Christendom. My dominions will give a " free passage to the armies of France: my troops,
 " my galleys, my treasures, shall be consecrated
 " to the common cause; and happy would be " my fate, could I deserve and obtain the crown " of martyrdom. Words are insufficient to ex" press the ardour with which I sigh for the re" union of the scattered members of Christ. If " my death could avail, I would gladly present
 " my sword and my neck; if the spiritual phoenix
 " could arise from my ashes, I would erect the " pile, and kindle the flame with my own hands." Yet the Greek emperor presumed to observe, that the articles of faith which divided the two churches had been introduced by the pride and precipitation of the Latins; he disclaimed the servile and arbitrary steps of the first Palaeologus; and firmly declared, that he would never submit his conscience, unless to the decrees of a free and

CHAP. universal synod. "The situation of the times," LXVI. continued he, "will not allow the pope and my" self to meet either at Rome or Constantinople:
 " but some maritime city may be chosen on the " verge of the two empires, to unite the bishops,
 " and to instruct the faithful, of the East and " West." The nuncios seemed content with the proposition; and Cantacuzene affects to deplore the failure of his hopes, which were soon overthrown by the death of Clement, and the different temper of his successor. His own life was prolonged, but it was prolonged in a cloister; and, except by his prayers, the humble monk was incapable of directing the counsels of his pupil or the state.<sup>f</sup>

*Treaty of John Palaeo-logus is with Innoc-cent vi.
 a. m. 1364.*

Yet of all the Byzantine princes, that pupil,
 John Palaeologus, was the best disposed to embrace, to believe, and to obey, the shepherd of the West. His mother, Anne of Savoy, was baptized in the bosom of the Latin church: her marriage with Andronicus imposed a change of name, of apparel, and of worship, but her heart was still faithful to her country and religion: she had formed the infancy of her son, and she governed the emperor, after his mind, or at least his stature, was enlarged to the size of man. In the first year of his deliverance and restoration, the Turks were still masters of the Hellespont; the son of Cantacuzene was in arms at Adrianople; and Palaeologus could depend neither on himself

<sup>f</sup> See this whole negotiation in Cantacuzene (l. vi. c. 7), who, amidst the praise and virtues which he bestows on himself, reveals the unbewilderedness of a guilty conscience.

nor on his people. By his mother's advice, and in the hope of foreign aid, he abjured the rights both of the church and state; and the act of slavery,* subscribed in purple ink, and sealed with the golden bull, was privately intrusted to an Italian agent. The first article of the treaty is an oath of fidelity and obedience to Innocent the sixth and his successors, the supreme pontiffs of the Roman and catholic church. The emperor promises to entertain with due reverence their legates and nuncios; to assign a palace for their residence, and a temple for their worship; and to deliver his second son Manuel as the hostage of his faith. For these condescensions he requires a prompt succour of fifteen galleys, with five hundred men at arms, and a thousand archers, to serve against his christian and mussulman enemies. Palaeologus engages to impose on his clergy and people the same spiritual yoke; but as the resistance of the Greeks might be justly foreseen, he adopts the two effectual methods of corruption and education. The legate was empowered to distribute the vacant benefices among the ecclesiastics who should subscribe the creed of the Vatican: three schools were instituted to instruct the youth of Constantinople in the language and doctrine of the Latins; and the name of Andronicus, the heir of the empire, was enrolled as the first student. Should he fail in the measures of persuasion or force, Palaeologus declares himself

* See this ignominious treaty in Henry (Hist. Britan. p. 131-134), from Hayek, who drew it from the Vatican archives. It was not worth the trouble of a phœnix surgery.

CHAP.
LXVI.

unworthy to reign; transferred to the pope all royal and paternal authority; and invested Innocent with full power to regulate the family, the government, and the marriage, of his son and successor. But this treaty was neither executed nor published: the Roman gollies were as vain and imaginary as the submission of the Greeks; and it was only by the secrecy, that their sovereign escaped the dishonour, of this fruitless humiliation.

Visit of John Palaeologus to Urban v.
at Rome,
A. D. 1349,
October 13,
&c.

The tempest of the Turkish arms soon burst on his head; and, after the loss of Adrianople and Romania, he was inclosed in his capital, the vassal of the haughty Amurath, with the miserable hope of being the last devoured by the savage. In this abject state Palaeologus embraced the resolution of embarking for Venice, and casting himself at the feet of the pope: he was the first of the Byzantine princes who had ever visited the unknown regions of the West; yet in them alone he could seek consolation or relief; and with less violation of his dignity he might appear in the sacred college than at the Ottoman Porte. After a long absence the Roman pontiffs were returning from Avignon to the banks of the Tyber: Urban the fifth,* of a mild and virtuous character, encouraged or allowed the pilgrimage of the Greek prince; and, within the same year, enjoyed the glory of receiving in the Vatican the two imperial shadows, who represented the majesty of Constantine and Charlemagne. In this suppliant visit the emperor of Constantinople, whose vanity was lost in his distress, gave more than could be expected of empty sounds and formal submissions. A previous trial was imposed; and in the presence of four cardinals, he acknowledged, as a true catholic, the supremacy of the pope, and the double procession of the Holy Ghost. After this purification he was introduced to a public audience in the church of St. Peter; Urban, in the midst of the cardinals, was seated on his throne; the Greek monarch, after three genuflexions, devoutly kissed the feet, the hands, and at length the mouth, of the holy father, who celebrated high mass in his presence, allowed him to lead the bridle of his mule, and treated him with a sumptuous banquet in the Vatican. The entertainment of Palæologus was friendly and honourable; yet some difference was observed between the emperors of the East and West; nor could the former be entitled to the rare privilege of chanting the gospel in the rank of a deacon.* In favour of his proselyte, Urban * Paulus institit quam et solent Imperator Romanorum. Yet his title of Imperator Romanorum was no longer disputed (Vit. Urban 5, p. 623).

* See the two first original lives of Urban v. (in Muratori, Script. rerum italicarum, tom. iii, p. 61, p. 613, 615), and the Ecclesiastical Annals of Spandanus (tom. i, p. 473, &c. 1582, No. 7), and Raynaldus (Floury, Hist. Eccles. tom. xi, p. 221, 221). Yet, from some variations, I suspect the papal writers of slightly magnifying the gratulations of Palaeologus.

* It was confined to the successors of Charlemagne, and to them only on Christmas day. On all other festivals these imperial shadows were content to serve the pope, as he said mass, with the book and the corporal. Yet the abbé de Sade generously thinks, that the merits of Charles ix might have entitled him, though not on the proper day (a. c. 1568, November 1), to the whole privilege. He seems to ascribe just value on the privilege and the man (Vit. de Petruccio, tom. III. p. 735).

CHAP.
LXVI.

strove to rekindle the zeal of the French king, and the other powers of the West; but he found them cold in the general cause, and active only in their domestic quarrels. The last hope of the emperor was in an English mercenary, John Hawkwood,<sup>1</sup> or Acuto, who with a band of adventurers, the white brotherhood, had ravaged Italy from the Alps to Calabria; sold his services to the hostile states; and incurred a just excommunication by shooting his arrows against the papal residence. A special licence was granted to negotiate with the outlaw, but the forces, or the spirit, of Hawkwood were unequal to the enterprise; and it was for the advantage, perhaps, of Palaeologus to be disappointed of a succour, that must have been costly, that could not be effectual, and which might have been dangerous.* The disconsolate Greek* prepared for his return,

* Through some Italian corruptions, the etymology of Falcone is lost (Marco Villani, l. vi. c. 19, in Muratori, tom. ix. p. 746), suggests the English word Hawkewood, the true name of our adventurous countryman (Thomas Walsingham, Hist. Angliæ, 1597 Scriptores Cambridgæ, p. 181). After ten and twenty victories, and one defeat, he died, in 1394, general of the Florentines, and was buried with such honours as the republic has not paid Dante or Petrarch (Muratori, Annoti d'Italia, tom. xii. p. 312-317).

* This torrent of English (by birth or service) overflowed from France into Italy after the peace of Breigny in 1380. Yet the estimation of Monstrel (Annoti, tom. xii. p. 197) is rather true than civil. "Ci ministrava ancor guerra, che dopo essere malpagato s'itava in da tanti manufatti Tormentati ed Unguenti, ventosetti stu delli." "Dignitatem suam cum a fidei et dilectione."

* Chalcostyles, l. i. p. 23, 26. The Greek supposes his journey to the king of France, which is sufficiently refused by the silence of the national historians. Nor am I much more inclined to believe that Palaeologus departed from Italy, while bene consulatus et consiliatus (Vit. Urban. v. p. 823.)

but even his return was impeded by a most ignominious obstacle. On his arrival at Venice he had borrowed large sums at exorbitant usury; but his coffers were empty, his creditors were impatient, and his person was detained as the best security for the payment. His eldest son Andronicus, the regent of Constantinople, was repeatedly urged to exhaust every resource; and, even by stripping the churches, to extricate his father from captivity and disgrace. But the unnatural youth was insensible of the disgrace, and secretly pleased with the captivity, of the emperor; the state was poor, the clergy were obstinate; nor could some religious scruple be wanting to excuse the guilt of his indifference and delay. Such undutiful neglect was severely reprov'd by the piety of his brother Manuel, who instantly sold or mortgaged all that he possessed, embarked for Venice, relieved his father, and pledged his own freedom to be responsible for the debt. On his return to Constantinople the parent and king distinguished his two sons with suitable rewards; but the faith and manners of the slothful Palæologus had not been improved by his Roman pilgrimage; and his apostasy or conversion, devoid of any spiritual or temporal effects, was speedily forgotten by the Greeks and Latins.*

Thirty years after the return of Palæologus, his son and successor, Manuel, from a similar motive, but on a larger scale, again visited the

* His return in 1370, and the coronation of Manuel, Sept. 25, 1373 (Dionysius, Var. Byzant. p. 341), leaves some intermediate era for the occupancy and punishment of Andronicus.

CHAP.
LXVI.

countries of the West. In a preceding chapter I have related his treaty with Bajazet, the violation of that treaty, the siege or blockade of Constantinople, and the French succour under the command of the gallant Boncicault.* By his ambassadors, Manuel had solicited the Latin powers; but it was thought that the presence of a distressed monarch would draw tears and supplies from the hardest barbarians;† and the marshal who advised the journey, prepared the reception of the Byzantine prince. The land was occupied by the Turks; but the navigation of Venice was safe and open; Italy received him as the first, or, at least, as the second of the christian princes; Manuel was pitied as the champion and confessor of the faith; and the dignity of his behaviour prevented that pity from sinking into contempt. From Venice he proceeded to Padua and Pavia; and even the duke of Milan, a secret ally of Bajazet, gave him safe and honourable conduct to the verge of his dominions.‡ On the confines of France§ the royal officers undertook the care of his person, journey, and expences; and two to the court

of France,
A. D. 1460,
June 2;

* Memoires de Boncicault, p. 1, c. 35, 36.

† His journey into the west of Europe is slightly, and I believe erroneously, noticed by Chalcovgyles (l. ii, c. 44-50) and Strabo (c. 14).

‡ Mutairin, Annali d'Italia, tom. xii, p. 409. John Galazzi was the first and most powerful duke of Milan. His connection with Bajazet is attested by Fréssard; and he was destined to save and deliver the French captives of Nicopolis.

§ For the reception of Manuel at Paris, see Spandanus Annal. Eccles., tom. i, p. 676, 677, A. D. 1460, No. 5), who quotes Journel des Ursins, and the monk of St. Denys; and Villaret (Hist. de France, tom. xii, p. 331-334), who quotes nobody, according to the last fashion of the French writers.

thousand of the richest citizens, in arms and on horseback, came forth to meet him as far as Charenton, in the neighbourhood of the capital. At the gates of Paris, he was saluted by the chancellor and the parliament; and Charles the sixth, attended by his princes and nobles, welcomed his brother with a cordial embrace. The successor of Constantine was clothed in a robe of white silk, and mounted on a milk-white steed; a circumstance, in the French ceremonial, of singular importance: the white colour is considered as the symbol of sovereignty; and, in a late visit, the German emperor, after an haughty demand and a peevish refusal, had been reduced to content himself with a black courser. Manuel was lodged in the Louvre; a succession of feasts and balls, the pleasures of the banquet and the chase, were ingeniously varied by the politeness of the French, to display their magnificence and amuse his grief: he was indulged in the liberty of his chapel; and the doctors of the Sorbonne were astonished, and possibly scandalised, by the language, the rites, and the vestments, of his Greek clergy. But the slightest glance on the state of the kingdom must teach him to despair of any effectual assistance. The unfortunate Charles, though he enjoyed some lucid intervals, continually relapsed into furious or stupid insanity; the reins of government were alternately seized by his brother and uncle, the dukes of Orleans and Burgundy, whose factious competition prepared the miseries of civil war. The former was a gay youth, dissolved in luxury and

CHAP.
LXVI.

of England,
A.D. 1190,
December.

love: the latter was the father of John count of Nevers, who had so lately been ransomed from Turkish captivity; and, if the fearless son was ardent to revenge his defeat, the more prudent Burgundy was content with the cost and peril of the first experiment. When Manuel had satiated the curiosity, and perhaps fatigued the patience, of the French, he resolved on a visit to the adjacent island. In his progress from Dover he was entertained at Canterbury with due reverence by the prior and monks of St. Austin; and, on Blackheath, king Henry the fourth, with the English court, saluted the Greek hero (I copy our old historian), who, during many days, was lodged and treated in London as emperor of the East.<sup>1</sup> But the state of England was still more adverse to the design of the holy war. In the same year the hereditary sovereign had been deposed and murdered: the reigning prince was a successful usurper, whose ambition was punished by jealousy and remorse: nor could Henry of Lancaster withdraw his person or forces from the defence of a throne incessantly shaken by conspiracy and rebellion. He pitied, he praised, he feasted, the emperor of Constantinople; but if the English monarch assumed the cross, it was only to appease his people, and perhaps his conscience, by the merit or semblance of this pious intention.* Satisfied, however, with gifts and honours, Manuel returned to Paris; and, after a residence of two years in the West, shaped his course through Germany and Italy, embarked at Venice, and patiently expected, in the Morea, the moment of his ruin or deliverance. Yet he had escaped the ignominious necessity of offering his religion to public or private sale. The Latin church was distracted by the great schism: the kings, the nations, the universities, of Europe, were divided in their obedience between the popes of Rome and Avignon; and the emperor, anxious to conciliate the friendship of both parties, abstained from any correspondence with the indigent and unpopular rivals. His journey coincided with the year of the jubilee; but he passed through Italy without desiring, or deserving, the plenary indulgence which abolished the guilt or penance of the sins of the faithful. The Roman pope was offended by this neglect; accused him of irreverence to an image of Christ; and exhorted the princes of Italy to reject and abandon the obstinate schismatic.*

<sup>1</sup> A short notice of Manuel, in England, is extracted by Dr. Hely from a MS. at Lambeth (de Græcis illustratus, p. 145, c. v. Imperator, de virtutibus et horrendis paganorum insidiis narratur, ut per gloriam constantiam triumphalem perspicere Anglorum regem videtur decrevit, &c. Rex (says Walsingham, p. 344) nobili apparuit . . . . suscepti (ut dicitur) tantum Heron, duabusque Londoniæ, et per multos dies exhibuit gloriam pro expensis hospitii sui admodum, et cum respiciens tanto fastigio donatus. He repeats the same in his Upodigma Neustria q. 336.

During the period of the crusades, the Greeks beheld with astonishment and terror the perpetual * Shakespeare begins and ends the play of Henry V. with the prince's vow of a crusade, and his belief that he should die in Jerusalem.

* This fact is preserved in the Historie Politice, v. v. 1501-1559, published by Martin Crusius (Turno Græciæ, p. 1-43). The image of Christ, which the Greek emperor refused to worship, was probably a work of sculpture.

CHAP.
LXVI.of Germany.
*71

stream of emigration that flowed, and continued to flow, from the unknown climates of the West. The visits of their last emperors removed the veil of separation, and they disclosed to their eyes the powerful nations of Europe, whom they no longer presumed to brand with the name of barbarians. The observations of Manuel, and his more inquisitive followers, have been preserved by a Byzantine historian of the times :* his scattered ideas I shall collect and abridge ; and it may be amusing enough, perhaps instructive, to contemplate the rude pictures of Germany, France, and England, whose ancient and modern state are so familiar to our minds. 1. Germany (says the Greek Chalcondyles) is of ample latitude from Vienna to the ocean ; and it stretches (a strange geography) from Prague in Bohemia to the river Tartessus, and the Pyrenæan mountains.* The soil, except in figs and olives, is sufficiently fruitful ; the air is salubrious ; the bodies of the natives are

* The Greek and Turkish history of Loucas Chalcondyles ends with the winter of 1463, and the abrupt conclusion seems to imply that he laid down his pen in the same year. We know that he was an Athenian, and that some contemporaries of the same name contributed to the revival of the Greek language in Italy. But in his numerous digressions, the modest historian has never introduced himself ; and his editor, Kienleiman, as well as Fabricius (Bibl. Græc. t. i. c. 174), seems ignorant of his life and character. For his descriptions of Germany, France, and England, see l. ii. p. 36, 37, 44-52.

* I shall not animadvert on the geographical errors of Chalcondyles. In this instance he perhaps followed, and mistook, Herodotus (l. ii. c. 33), whose text may be explained (Herodote de Larcher, tom. ii. p. 219, 220), or whose ignorance may be excused. Had these modern Greeks ever read Strabo, or any of the lesser geographers?

robust and healthy; and these cold regions are seldom visited with the calamities of pestilence or earthquakes. After the Scythians or Tartars, the Germans are the most numerous of nations; they are brave and patient, and were they united under a single head, their force would be irresistible. By the gift of the pope, they have acquired the privilege of choosing the Roman emperor;* nor is any people more devoutly attached to the faith and obedience of the Latin patriarch. The greatest part of the country is divided among the princes and prelates; but Strasburgh, Cologne, Hamburgh, and more than two hundred free cities, are governed by sage and equal laws, according to the will, and for the advantage, of the whole community. The use of duels, or single combats on foot, prevails among them in peace and war; their industry excels in all the mechanic arts, and the Germans may boast of the invention of gunpowder and cannon, which is now diffused over the greatest part of the world. 11. The kingdom of France is spread above fifteen or twenty days journey from Germany to Spain, and from the Alps to the British ocean; containing many flourishing cities, and among these Paris, the seat of the king, which surpasses the rest in riches and luxury. Many princes and lords alternately wait in his

* A citizen of new Rome, while new Rome survived, would have seemed to dignify the German Pap with the title of king or Advising Emperor: but all pride was extinct in the breast of Charondyles; and he describes the Byzantine prince, and his subject, by the proper, though humble names of Emperor, and servant Emperor.

CHAP.
LXVI.

palace, and acknowledge him as their sovereign ; the most powerful are the dukes of Bretagne and Burgundy, of whom the latter possesses the wealthy province of Flanders, whose harbours are frequented by the ships and merchants of our own and the more remote seas. The French are an ancient and opulent people ; and their language and manners, though somewhat different, are not dissimilar from those of the Italians. Vain of the imperial dignity of Charlemagne, of their victories over the Saracens, and of the exploits of their heroes, Oliver and Rowland,<sup>b</sup> they esteem themselves the first of the western nations ; but this foolish arrogance has been recently humbled by the unfortunate events of their wars against the English, the inhabitants of the British island. 111. Britain, in the ocean, and opposite to the shores of Flanders, may be considered either as one, or as three islands ; but the whole is united by a common interest, by the same manners, and by a similar government. The measure of its circumference is five thousand stadia : the land is overspread with towns and villages : though destitute of wine, and not abounding in fruit trees, it is fertile in wheat and barley, in honey and wool ; and much cloth is manufactured by the inhabitants. In populous-

<sup>b</sup> Most of the old romances were translated in the fourteenth century into French prose, and soon became the favourite amusement of the knights and ladies in the court of Charlema. If a Greek believed in the exploits of Rowland and Oliver, he may surely be excused, when the monks of St. Denis, the national historians, have inserted the fables of archbishop Turpin in their Chronicles of France.

ness and power, in riches and luxury, London,* the metropolis of the isle, may claim a pre-eminence over all the cities of the West. It is situate on the Thames, a broad and rapid river, which, at the distance of thirty miles, falls into the Gallic sea; and the daily flow and ebb of the tide affords a safe entrance and departure to the vessels of commerce. The king is the head of a powerful and turbulent aristocracy; his principal vassals hold their estates by a free and unalterable tenure; and the laws define the limits of his authority and their obedience. The kingdom has been often afflicted by foreign conquest and domestic sedition; but the natives are bold and hardy, renowned in arms, and victorious in war. The form of their shields or targets is derived from the Italians, that of their swords from the Greeks; the use of the long bow is the peculiar and decisive advantage of the English. Their language bears no affinity to the idioms of the continent: in the habits of domestic life, they are not easily distinguished from their neighbours of France; but the most singular circumstance of their manners is their disregard of conjugal honour and of female chastity. In their mutual visits, as the first act of hospitality, the guest is welcomed in the embraces of their wives and daughters: among friends, they are lent and borrowed without * London . . . ἡ τοῦ αἰῶνος ἡ πόλις, ἡ τοῦ αἰῶνος ἡ πόλις, ἡ τοῦ αἰῶνος ἡ πόλις, ἡ τοῦ αἰῶνος ἡ πόλις. Even since the time of Ptolemy (the second century), London appears to have maintained this pre-eminence of wealth and magnitude; and her gradual increase has, at least, kept pace with the general improvement of Europe.

CHAP.
LXVI.

[continued]

shame; nor are the islanders offended at this strange commerce, and its inevitable consequences.* Informed as we are of the customs of old England, and assured of the virtue of our mothers, we may smile at the credulity, or resent the injustice, of the Greek, who must have confounded a modest salute<sup>f</sup> with a criminal embrace. But his credulity and injustice may teach an important lesson: to distrust the accounts of foreign and remote nations, and to suspend our belief of every tale that deviates from the laws of nature and the character of man.<sup>g</sup>

Indifference of Manuel towards the Latins,
p. 1162-
1163.

After his return, and the victory of Timour, Manuel reigned many years in prosperity and peace. As long as the sons of Bajazet solicited his friendship and spared his dominions, he was satisfied with the national religion; and his leisure was employed in composing twenty theological dialogues for its defence. The appearance of the Byzantine ambassadors at the council of Constance<sup>h</sup> announces the restoration of the

* If the double sense of the verb κω (to scold, and to woo) be equalled, the constant and pious terror of Chelmsfordian can leave no doubt of his meaning and mistake (p. 43).

<sup>f</sup> Erasmus (Epist. Panato Ambrosiano) has a pretty passage on the English fashion of kissing strangers on their arrival and departure; from whence, however, he draws no scandalous inferences.

<sup>g</sup> Perhaps we may apply this remark to the credulity of nations among the old Romans, as it is supposed by Cæsar and Dion Cassius, l. xxi. tom. ii. p. 1007, with Reimar's judicious annotation. The story of Othobus, as related at first, is become less credible and scandalous, in proportion as we have studied the manners of that gentle and amiable people.

<sup>h</sup> See Loufant, Hist. du Concile de Constance, tom. ii. p. 576; and for the ecclesiastical history of the thirteenth, the Annals of Spandjun, the Epitaphes of Dupin, tom. xii. and volumes xxi and xxii of the History, or rather the Continuation, of Fleury.

Turkish power, as well as of the Latin church; the conquest of the sultans, Mahomet and Amurath, reconciled the emperor to the Vatican; and the siege of Constantinople almost tempted him to acquiesce in the double procession of the Holy Ghost. When Martin the fifth ascended, without a rival, the chair of St. Peter, a friendly intercourse of letters and embassies was revived between the East and West. Ambition on one side, and distress on the other, dictated the same decent language of charity and peace: the artful Greek expressed a desire of marrying his six sons to Italian princesses; and the Roman, not less artful, dispatched the daughter of the marquis of Montferrat, with a company of noble virgins, to soften by their charms the obstinacy of the schismatics. Yet under this mask of zeal, a discerning eye will perceive that all was hollow and insincere in the court and church of Constantinople. According to the vicissitudes of danger and repose, the emperor advanced or retreated; alternately instructed and disavowed his ministers; and escaped from an importunate pressure by urging the duty of inquiry, the obligation of collecting the sense of his patriarchs and bishops, and the impossibility of convening them at a time when the Turkish arms were at the gates of his capital. From a review of the public transactions, it will appear that the Greeks insisted on three successive measures, a succour, a council, and a final reunion, while the Latins eluded the second, and only promised the first, as a consequential and voluntary reward of the third. But

CHAP.
LXVI.

His negotiations,
A. D. 1417.
1423.

CHAP.
LXVI.His private motives.

we have an opportunity of unfolding the most secret intentions of Manuel, as he explained them in a private conversation, without artifice or disguise. In his declining age, the emperor had associated John Palasologus, the second of the name, and the eldest of his sons, on whom he devolved the greatest part of the authority and weight of government. One day, in the presence only of the historian Phranza,<sup>b</sup> his favourite chamberlain, he opened to his colleague and successor the true principle of his negotiations with the pope.<sup>c</sup> "Our last resource," said Manuel, "against the Turks is their fear of our union with the Latins, of the warlike nations of the West, who may arm for our relief, and for their destruction. As often as you are threatened by the miscreants, present this danger before their eyes. Propose a council; consult on the means; but ever delay and avoid the convocation of an assembly, which cannot tend either to our spiritual or temporal emolument.

<sup>a</sup> From his early youth, George Phranza, or Phranza, was employed in the service of the state and palace; and Haenckius (De Script. Byzant. p. 1, n. 40) has collected his life from his own writings. He was no more than four-and-twenty years of age at the death of Manuel, who recommended him in the strongest terms to his successor. Impetius vero hunc Phranzen illi commendavit, qui ministerii iussu seculum et diligenter (Phranzen. l. ii. c. 15). Yet the emperor John was ruled, and he preferred the service of the despot of Peloponnesus.

<sup>b</sup> See Phranzen, l. ii. c. 13. While so many manuscripts of the Greek original are extant in the libraries of Rome, Milan, the Escurial, &c. it is a matter of shame and reproach, that we should be reduced to the Latin version, or abstract, of James Pontanus ad calcem Theophrasti Symocetis (Ingolstadt. 1604), so deficient in accuracy and elegance (Fabric. Biblioth. Græc. tom. vi. p. 614-670).

" The Latins are proud; the Greeks are ob- CHAP.
 " stinate; neither party will recede or retract; LXVI
 " and the attempt of a perfect union will confirm
 " the schism, alienate the churches, and leave " us, without hope or defence, at the mercy of " the barbarians." Impatient of this salutary lesson, the royal youth arose from his seat, and departed in silence; and the wise monarch (continues Pluranza), casting his eyes on me, thus resumed his discourse: " My son deems himself
 " a great and heroic prince; but, alas! our mi" serable age does not afford scope for heroism " or greatness. His daring spirit might have " suited the happier times of our ancestors; but
 " the present state requires not an emperor, but
 " a cautious steward of the last relics of our " fortunes. Well do I remember the lofty ex" pectations which he built on our alliance with " Mustapha; and much do I fear that his rash " courage will urge the ruin of our house, and
 " that even religion may precipitate our down" fall." Yet the experience and authority of Manuel preserved the peace, and eluded the council, till, in the seventy-eighth year of his age, and the death in the habit of a monk, he terminated his career, dividing his precious moveables among his children and the poor, his physicians and his favourite servants. Of his six sons,<sup>a</sup> Andronicus, the second, was invested with the principality of Thessalonica, and died of a leprosy soon after the sale of that city to the Venetians, and its final conquest by the Turks. Some fortunate incidents

<sup>a</sup> See Ducange, Fam. Byzant. p. 243-244.

CHAP.
LXVI.

VIENNE

had restored Peloponnesus, or the Morea, to the empire; and in his more prosperous days, Manuel had fortified the narrow isthmus of six miles<sup>1</sup> with a stone-wall and one hundred and fifty-three towers. The wall was overthrown by the first blast of the Ottomans: the fertile peninsula might have been sufficient for the four younger brothers, Theodore and Constantine, Demetrius and Thomas; but they wasted in domestic contests the remains of their strength; and the least successful of the rivals were reduced to a life of dependence in the Byzantine palace.

Reign of John Palae-ologus (1,
c. c. 1425-
1457.

The eldest of the sons of Manuel, John Palaeologus the second, was acknowledged, after his father's death, as the sole emperor of the Greeks. He immediately proceeded to repudiate his wife, and to contract a new marriage with the princess of Trebizond; beauty was, in his eyes, the first qualification of an empress; and the clergy had yielded to his firm assurance, that unless he might be indulged in a divorce, he would retire to a cloister, and leave the throne to his brother Constantine. The first, and, in truth, the only, victory of Palaeologus was over a Jew,<sup>2</sup> whom, after a long and learned dispute, he converted to the christian faith; and this momentous conquest is carefully recorded in the history of the times. But he soon resumed the design of uniting the East and West; and regardless of his father's advice, listened, as it should seem, with sincerity, to the proposal of meeting the pope in a general council beyond the Adriatic. This dangerous project was encouraged by Martin the fifth, and coldly entertained by his successor Eugenius, till, after a tedious negotiation, the emperor received a summons from the Latin assembly of a new character, the independent prelates of Basil, who styled themselves the representatives and judges of the catholic church.

<sup>1</sup> The exact measure of the Hexamilion, from sea to sea, was 3600 orgyia, or stades, of six Greek feet (Phrangaes, l. i, c. 38), which would produce a Greek mile, still smaller than that of 660 French toises, which is assigned by d'Anville as still in use in Turkey. Five miles are commonly reckoned for the breadth of the isthmus. See the Treatise of Span, Wheeler, and Chandler.

<sup>2</sup> The first argument of the Jews, is on the death of Christ: if it were voluntary, Christ was a suicide; which the emperor parries with a mystery. They then dispute on the conception of the virgin, the signs of the prophesies, &c. (Phrangaes, l. ii, c. 12, a whole chapter).

The Roman pontiff had fought and conquered in the cause of ecclesiastical freedom; but the victorious clergy were soon exposed to the tyranny of their deliverer; and his sacred character was invulnerable to those arms which they found so keen and effectual against the civil magistrate. Their great charter, the right of election, was annihilated by appeals, evaded by trusts or commendams, disappointed by reversionary grants, and superseded by previous and arbitrary reservations.* A public auction was instituted in the court of Rome: the cardinals and favourites were enriched with the spoils of nations; and every country might complain that the most important and valuable benefices were accumulated on the

Corruption of the Latin church.

* In the trattato delle Massime Beneficenze di Fra Paolo (in the fourth volume of the last and best edition of his works), the papal system is deeply studied and freely described. Should Rome and her religion be annihilated, this golden volume may still survive, a philosophical history, and a salutary warning.

CHAP.
LXVI.Schism,
A. D. 1317-
1418.Council of Pisa,
A. D. 1409, of Constance,
A. D. 1414-1418;

heads of aliens and absentees. During their residence at Avignon, the ambition of the popes subsided in the meaner passions of avarice* and luxury: they rigorously imposed on the clergy the tributes of first-fruits and tithes; but they freely tolerated the impunity of vice, disorder, and corruption. These manifold scandals were aggravated by the great schism of the West, which continued above fifty years. In the furious conflicts of Rome and Avignon, the vices of the rivals were mutually exposed: and their precarious situation degraded their authority, relaxed their discipline, and multiplied their wants and exactions. To heal the wounds, and restore the monarchy, of the church, the synods of Pisa and Constance† were successively convened; but these great assemblies, conscious of their strength, resolved to vindicate the privileges of the christian aristocracy. From a personal sentence against two pontiffs, whom they rejected, and a third, their acknowledged sovereign, whom they deposed, the fathers of Constance proceeded to examine the nature and limits of the Roman supremacy; nor did they separate till they had * Pope John xxii. (in 1334) left behind him, at Avignon, eighteen millions of gold florins, and the value of seven millions more in plate and jewels. See the Chronicle of John Villani (l. xi, c. 26), in Muratori's Collection, tom. iii, p. 782, whose leather covered the account from the papal treasures. A treasure of six or eight millions sterling in the fourteenth century is enormous, and almost incredible.

† A learned and liberal protestant, M. Loefling, has given a full history of the councils of Pisa, Constance, and Basel, in six volumes in quarto; but the last part is the most hasty and imperfect, except in the account of the troubles of Bohemia.

established the authority, above the pope, of a general council. It was enacted, that, for the government and reformation of the church, such assemblies should be held at regular intervals; and that each synod, before its dissolution, should appoint the time and place of the subsequent meeting. By the influence of the court of Rome, the next convocation at Sienna was easily eluded; but the bold and vigorous proceedings of the council of Basil<sup>a</sup> had almost been fatal to the reigning pontiff, Eugenius the fourth. A just suspicion of his design prompted the fathers to hasten the promulgation of their first decree, that the representatives of the church-militant on earth were invested with a divine and spiritual jurisdiction over all christians, without excepting the pope; and that a general council could not be dissolved, prorogued, or transferred, unless by their free deliberation and consent. On the notice that Eugenius had fulminated a bull for that purpose, they ventured to summon, to admonish, to threaten, to censure, the contumacious successor of St. Peter. After many delays, to allow time for repentance, they finally declared, that, unless he submitted within the term of sixty days, he was suspended from the exercise of all temporal and ecclesi-

CHAP.
LXVI.

of Basil,
A. D. 1431-1448.

Their opposition to Eugenius

<sup>a</sup> The original acts or minutes of the council of Basil are preserved in the public library, in twelve volumes in folio. Basil was a free city, conveniently situate on the Rhine, and guarded by the arms of the neighbouring and confederate Swiss. In 1459, the university was founded by pope Pius II (Æneas Sylvius), who had been secretary to the council. But what is a council, or an university, to the power of Froben and the studies of Erasmus?

CHAP.
LXVI

atical authority. And to mark their jurisdiction over the prince as well as the priest, they assumed the government of Avignon, annulled the alienation of the sacred patrimony, and protected Rome from the imposition of new taxes. Their boldness was justified, not only by the general opinion of the clergy, but by the support and power of the first monarchs of Christendom; the emperor Sigismund declared himself the servant and protector of the synod; Germany and France adhered to their cause; the duke of Milan was the enemy of Eugenius; and he was driven from the Vatican by an insurrection of the Roman people. Rejected at the same time by his temporal and spiritual subjects, submission was his only choice; by a most humiliating bull, the pope repealed his own acts, and ratified those of the council; incorporated his legates and cardinals with that venerable body; and seemed to resign himself to the decrees of the supreme legislature. Their fame pervaded the countries of the East; and it was in their presence that Sigismund received the ambassadors of the Turkish sultan,* who laid at his feet twelve large vases, filled with robes of silk and pieces of gold. The fathers of Basil aspired to the glory of reducing the Greeks, as well as the Bohemians, within the pale of the church; and their deputies invited the emperor and patriarch of Constantinople to unite with an assembly which possessed the confidence of the western nations. Palæologus was not averse to

*Sigismund comes with the Greeks,
&c. n. 1434-
1437.*

* This Turkish embassy, attested only by Cranzlus, is related, with some doubt, by the annalist Spondanus, x. n. 1433, No. 25, tom. i. p. 824.

the proposal; and his ambassadors were introduced with due honours into the catholic senate. But the choice of the place appeared to be an insuperable obstacle, since he refused to pass the Alps, or the sea of Sicily, and positively required that the synod should be adjourned to some convenient city in Italy, or at least on the Danube. The other articles of this treaty were more readily stipulated: it was agreed to defray the travelling expences of the emperor, with a train of seven hundred persons,* to remit an immediate sum of eight thousand ducats† for the accommodation of the Greek clergy: and in his absence to grant a supply of ten thousand ducats, with three hundred archers and some gallees, for the protection of Constantinople. The city of Avignon advanced the funds for the preliminary expences: and the embarkation was prepared at Marseilles with some difficulty and delay.

In his distress, the friendship of Palæologus was disputed by the ecclesiastical powers of the West; but the dexterous activity of a monarch prevailed over the slow debates and inflexible temper of a republic. The decrees of Basil conditionally tended to circumscribe the despotism of * Hieronymus, p. 19. In this list, the Greeks appear to have exceeded the real numbers of the clergy and laity which afterwards attended the emperor and patriarch, but which are not clearly specified by the great ecclesiastics. The 15,000 florins which they asked of this obligation of the pope (p. 14) went more than they could hope of him.

John Palæologus embarked in the pope's galley, A. D. 1437, Nov. 4.

† I have indifferently the words denari and scudi, which derive their names, the former from the duke of Milan, the latter from the republic of Florence. These gold pieces, the first that were coined in Italy, perhaps in the Latin world, may be compared, in weight and value, to one-third of the English guinea.

CHAP.
LXVI.

the pope, and to erect a supreme and perpetual tribunal in the church. Eugenius was impatient of the yoke; and the union of the Greeks might afford a decent pretence for translating a rebellious synod from the Rhine to the Po. The independence of the fathers was lost if they passed the Alps; Savoy or Avignon, to which they acceded with reluctance, were described at Constantinople as situate far beyond the pillars of Hercules;* the emperor and his clergy were apprehensive of the dangers of a long navigation; they were offended by an haughty declaration, that after suppressing the new heresy of the Bohemians, the council would soon eradicate the old heresy of the Greeks.† On the side of Eugenius, all was smooth, and yielding, and respectful; and he invited the Byzantine monarch to heal by his presence the schism of the Latin, as well as of the Eastern, church. Ferrara, near the coast of the Adriatic, was proposed for their amicable interview; and with some indulgence of forgery and theft, a surreptitious decree was procured, which transferred the synod, with its own consent, to that Italian city. Nine gallees were equipped for this service at Venice, and in the isle of Candia; their diligence anticipated the slower vessels of Basil: the Roman admiral was commissioned to burn, sink, and destroy? and these priestly squadrons might have encountered each other in the same seas where Athens and Sparta had formerly contended for the pre-eminence of glory. Assaulted by the importunity of the factions, who were ready to fight for the possession of his person, Palmologus hesitated before he left his palace and country on a perilous experiment. His father's advice still dwelt on his memory: and reason must suggest, that since the Latins were divided among themselves, they could never unite in a foreign cause. Sigismund dissuaded the unseasonable adventure: his advice was impartial, since he adhered to the council; and it was enforced by the strange belief, that the German Cæsar would nominate a Greek his heir and successor in the empire of the West.* Even the Turkish sultan was a counsellor whom it might be unsafe to trust, but whom it was dangerous to offend. Amurath was unskilled in the disputes, but he was apprehensive of the union, of the christians. From his own treasures, he offered to relieve the wants of the Byzantine court; yet he declared with seeming magnanimity,

* At the end of the Latin version of Pierarchus, we find a long Greek epistle or declamation of George of Trebizond, who rebukes the attempt to pervert Eugenius and Italy. He treats with contempt the schismatic assembly of Basel, the barbarians of Gaul and Germany, who had conspired to transport the chair of St. Peter beyond the Alps: ἡ ἁγία ἐκκλησία καὶ οὐκ ἐστὶν ποτὶς ἐκ τοῦ ὄρους Ἰερουσαλὴμ μετακινήσασθαι καὶ πρὸς τὰς ἄλπεας μετακινήσασθαι. Was Constantinople unprovided with a map?

† Syrrephates (p. 26-27) avows his own indignation, and that of his countrymen; and the Basil deputies, who excused the rash declaration, could neither deny nor alter an act of the council.

* Condulmer, the pope's nephew and admiral, expressly declared, in synodo quædam res fieri in malis, res in bonis, in malis res in bonis, et in bonis res in malis. The naval orders of the synod were less peremptory: and, all the hostile squadrons opposed, both parties tried to conceal their quarrel from the Greeks.

* Synepulus mentions the hopes of Palmologus (p. 38), and the last advice of Sigismund (p. 37). At Constantinople, the Greek emperor was informed of his friend's death: had he known it sooner, he would have returned home (p. 79).

CHAP.
LXVI.

that Constantinople should be secure and inviolate in the absence of her sovereign.* The resolution of Palæologus was decided by the most splendid gifts and the most specious promises: he wished to escape for a while from a scene of danger and distress; and after dismissing with an ambiguous answer the messengers of the council, he declared his intention of embarking in the Roman galleys. The age of the patriarch Joseph was more susceptible of fear than of hope; he trembled at the perils of the sea, and expressed his apprehension, that his feeble voice, with thirty perhaps of his orthodox brethren, would be oppressed in a foreign land by the power and numbers of a Latin synod. He yielded to the royal mandate, to the flattering assurance, that he would be heard as the oracle of nations, and to the secret wish of learning from his brother of the West, to deliver the church from the yoke of kings.† The five crus-bearers, or dignitaries of St. Sophia, were bound to attend his person; and one of these, the great ecclesiarch or preacher, Sylvester Syropalus,‡ has * Plinianus himself, though from different motives, was of the opinion of Amiraith (l. ii. c. 13). Plinianus ne quibusdam sine iniquitate seque, et hostes adfuerint et detrimenta pariter esset. This Turkish jealousy is likewise mentioned by Syropalus (p. 39); and Amiraith kept his word. He sought Theodosius (p. 175, 219), but he never attacked the city.

† The reader will smile at the simplicity with which he imported these legends in his lamentable conversatio expositio (l. vi. c. 1). He is a Deus (Aggi Christophorus etc.) and angelus and vis miraculorum etc. Janus tempus et hominum (p. 39). Yet it would have been difficult for him to have practised the lessons of Gregory vii.

‡ The christian name of Sylvester is borrowed from the Latin ex. videtur. In modern Greek, meton, as a diminutive, is added to the composed<sup>a</sup> a free and curious history of the false union.* Of the clergy that reluctantly obeyed the summons of the emperor and the patriarch, submission was the first duty, and patience the most useful virtue. In a chosen list of twenty bishops, we discover the metropolitan titles of Heraclea and Cyzicus, Nice and Nicomedia, Ephesus and Trebizond, and the personal merit of Mark and Bessarion, who, in the confidence of their learning and eloquence, were promoted to the episcopal rank. Some monks and philosophers were named to display the science and sanctity of the Greek church: and the service of the choir was performed by a select band of singers and musicians. The patriarchs of Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem, appeared by their genuine or fictitious deputies; the primate of Russia represented a national church, and the Greeks might contend with the Latins in the extent of their spiritual empire. The precious vases of St. Sophia were exposed to the winds and waves, that the patriarch might officiate with becoming splendour; whatever gold and of metals: nor can any measure of Creghton, the editor, versus his charging him Syropoulos Ogenius, Ogenius the Syropoulos of his own handwriting, whose name is corrected with his own hand in the text of the manuscript of Florence. Why might not the author be of Syrian extraction?

CHAP.
LXVI.
.....

<sup>a</sup> From the completion of the history, I should fix the date to the year 1444, four years after the synod, when the great patriarch had dedicated his office (see to xiv, p. 220-225). His passions were cooled by time and retirement; and, although Syropoulos is often partial, he is never intemperate.

<sup>b</sup> Corp. Histor. univ. eccles. vici Graecia et Latina (Hagæ Comitis, 1840, in folio), was first published with a letter and short preface, by Robert Creghton, chaplain to Charles VI. in his exile. The care of the editor has prefixed a polemical title, for the beginning of the original is wanting. Syropoulos may be ranked with the best of the Byzantine writers for the merit of his narration, and even of his style; but he is excluded from the articles collection of the manuscript.

CHAP.
LXVI.

the emperor could procure, was expended in the massy ornaments of his bed and chariot;<sup>a</sup> and while they affected to maintain the prosperity of their ancient fortune, they quarrelled for the division of fifteen thousand ducats, the first alms of the Roman pontiff. After the necessary preparations, John Palæologus, with a numerous train, accompanied by his brother Demetrius, and the most respectable persons of the church and state, embarked in eight vessels with sails and oars, which steered through the Turkish straits of Gallipoli to the Archipelago, the Morea, and the Adriatic gulf.<sup>b</sup>

His triumphant entry at Venice,
i. p. 1438;
vol. 24

After a tedious and troublesome navigation of seventy-seven days, this religious squadron cast anchor before Venice; and their reception proclaimed the joy and magnificence of that powerful republic. In the command of the world, the modest Augustus had never claimed such honours from his subjects, as were paid to his feeble successor by an independent state. Seated on the poop, on a lofty throne, he received the visit, or, in the Greek style, the adoration, of the doge and senators.<sup>c</sup> They sailed in the Bucentaur,

<sup>a</sup> Syropoulos (p. 63) simply expresses his intention to see the emperor in Venice with his train and horses, and the bath of Creighton may afford a specimen of his field paraphrase. Ux pompa circum, ductis vestes Imperatoris, Balne perulis aliquis decoratus Jupiter recedens, sub Cressa ex opulenta Cylla.

<sup>b</sup> Although I cannot stop to quote Syropoulos for every fact, I will observe that the navigation of the Greeks from Constantinople to Venice and Ferrara is contained in the fourth section (p. 87-160), and that the historian has the commendable talent of placing each scene before the reader's eye.

<sup>c</sup> At the time of the synod, Phocas was in Peloponnesus; but he returned from the desert Demetrius a faithful account of the horrible massacre.

which was accompanied by twelve stately galleys: the sea was overspread with innumerable gondolas of pomp and pleasure; the air resounded with music and acclamations; the mariners, and even the vessels, were dressed in silk and gold; and in all the emblems and pageants, the Roman eagles were blended with the lions of St. Mark. The triumphal procession, ascending the great canal, passed under the bridge of the Rialto; and the eastern strangers gazed with admiration on the palaces, the churches, and the populousness of a city, that seems to float on the bosom of the waves.<sup>1</sup> They sighed to behold the spoils and trophies with which it had been decorated after the sack of Constantinople. After an hospitable entertainment of fifteen days, Palaeologus pursued his journey by land and water from Venice to Ferrara; and on this occasion, the pride of the Vatican was tempered by policy to indulge the ancient dignity of the emperor of the East. He made his entry on a black horse; but a milk-white steed, whose trappings were embroidered with golden eagles, was led before him; and the canopy was borne over his head by the princes of Este, the sons or kinsmen of Nicholas, marquis of the city, and a sovereign

CHAP.
LXVI.into Ferrara.
Vol. 26.

reception of the emperor and patriarch both at Venice and Ferrara (Duc. &c. adrianum imperatorem adventu), which are more slightly mentioned by the Latins (l. ii. c. 14, 15, 16).

<sup>1</sup> The circumstance of a Greek prince and a French ambassador (Messieurs de Philippe de Combaud, l. vii. c. 18), at the sight of Venice, abundantly prove, that in the sixteenth century, it was the first and most splendid of the christian cities. For the spoils of Constantinople at Venice, see Syprianus (p. 87).

CHAP.
LXVI.

more powerful than himself.<sup>1</sup> Palæologus did not alight till he reached the bottom of the staircase: the pope advanced to the door of the apartment: refused his proffered genuflection; and, after a paternal embrace, conducted the emperor to a seat on his left hand. Nor would the patriarch descend from his galley, till a ceremony, almost equal, had been stipulated between the bishops of Rome and Constantinople. The latter was saluted by his brother with a kiss of union and charity; nor would any of the Greek ecclesiastics submit to kiss the feet of the western primate. On the opening of the synod, the place of honour in the centre was claimed by the temporal and ecclesiastical chiefs, and it was only by alleging that his predecessors had not assisted in person at Nice or Chalcedon, that Eugenius could evade the ancient precedence of Constantine and Marcian. After much debate, it was agreed that the right and left sides of the church should be occupied by the two nations: that the solitary chair of St. Peter should be raised the first of the Latin line; and that the throne of the Greek emperor, at the head of his clergy, should be equal and opposite to the second place, the vacant seat of the emperor of the West.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Nicholas III. of Rome reigned for twenty-eight years (A. D. 1203-1221), and was lord of Ferrara, Modena, Reggio, Parma, Bologna, and Comacina. See his life in Muratori's Antichità Estense, tom. V. p. 109-1015.

<sup>2</sup> The Latin vulgar was provoked to laughter at the strange dresses of the Greeks, and especially the length of their garments, their sleeves, and their henns; nor was the emperor distinguished except by the purple colour, and his diadem or tiara with a jewel on the top of it.

But as soon as festivity and form had given place to a more serious treaty, the Greeks were dissatisfied with their journey, with themselves, and with the pope. The artful pencil of his emissaries had painted him in a prosperous state; at the head of the princes and prelates of Europe, obedient, at his voice, to believe and to win. The thin appearance of the universal synod of Ferrara betrayed his weakness; and the Latins opened the first session with only five archbishops, eighteen bishops, and ten abbots, the greatest part of whom were the subjects or countrymen of the Italian pontiff. Except the duke of Burgundy, none of the potentates of the West condescended to appear in person, or by their ambassadors; nor was it possible to suppress the judicial acts of Basil against the dignity and person of Eugenius, which were finally concluded by a new election. Under these circumstances, a truce or delay was asked and granted; till Palæologus could expect from the consent of the Latins some temporal reward for an unpopular union; and, after the first session, the public proceedings were adjourned above six months. The emperor, with a chosen band of his favourites and priviesers, fixed his summer residence at a pleasant spacious monastery, six miles from Ferrara; forgot, in the pleasures of the chase, the distress of the church and state; and persisted in destroying the game, without listening to the just complaints of the marquis or

CHAP.
LXVI.
Council of the Greeks and Latins at Ferrara and Florence,
A. D. 1438,
Oct. 8.
A. D. 1439,
July 6.

(Holtz de Grece Illustrée, p. 31). Yet another spectator confesses, that the Greek fashion was plus grave & plus noble than the Italian (Vespasiano, in Vit. Eugen. iv, in Morisori, tom. xiv, p. 267).

CHAP.
LXVI.

the husbandman.<sup>28</sup> In the meanwhile, his unfortunate Greeks were exposed to all the miseries of exile and poverty: for the support of each stranger, a monthly allowance was assigned of three or four gold florins; and although the entire sum did not amount to seven hundred florins, a long arrear was repeatedly incurred by the indigence or policy of the Roman court.<sup>29</sup> They sighed for a speedy deliverance, but their escape was prevented by a triple chain: a passport from their superiors was required at the gates of Ferrara: the government of Venice had engaged to arrest and send back the fugitives; and inevitable punishment awaited them at Constantinople; excommunication, fines, and a sentence, which did not respect the sacerdotal dignity, that they should be stripped naked and publicly whipped.<sup>30</sup> It was only by the alternative of hunger or dispute that the Greeks could be persuaded to

<sup>28</sup> For the emperor's hunting, see Syropoulos (p. 162, 164, 161). The pope had sent him eleven miserable hawks; but he bought a strong and swift team that came from Russia. The name of judicature may surprise; but the name, rather than the institution, had passed from the Ottoman to the Byzantine court, and is often used in the last age of the empire.

<sup>29</sup> The Greeks obtained, with much difficulty, that instead of provisions, money should be distributed, four scudi per month to the persons of honorable rank, and three scudi to their servants, with an addition of thirty more to the emperor, twenty-five to the patriarch, and twenty to the person so denoted Demetrios. The payment of the first month amounted to 221 scudi, a sum which will not allow us to reckon above 200 Greeks of every condition (Syropoulos, p. 164, 165). On the 20th October 1439, there was an arrest of four months; in April 1440, of three; and of five and a half in July, at the time of the union (p. 179, 221, 221).

<sup>30</sup> Syropoulos (p. 141, 142, 204, 221) deplores the imprisonment of the Greeks, and the tyranny of the emperor and patriarch.

open the first conference; and they yielded with extreme reluctance to attend from Ferrara to Florence the rear of a flying synod. This new translation was urged by inevitable necessity: the city was visited by the plague; the fidelity of the marquis might be suspected; the mercenary troops of the duke of Milan were at the gates; and as they occupied Romagna, it was not without difficulty and danger that the pope, the emperor, and the bishops, explored their way through the unfrequented paths of the Apennines.*

Yet all these obstacles were surmounted by time and policy. The violence of the fathers of Basil rather promoted than injured the cause of Eugenius: the nations of Europe abhorred the schism, and disowned the election, of Felix the fifth, who was successively a duke of Savoy, an hermit, and a pope; and the great princes were gradually reclaimed by his competitor to a favourable neutrality and a firm attachment. The legates, with some respectable members, deserted to the Roman army, which insensibly rose in numbers and reputation: the council of Basil was reduced to thirty-nine bishops, and three hundred of the inferior clergy;† while the Latins of * The wars of Italy are most clearly represented in the thirteenth volume of the Annals of Münster. The ultimatum of Syropulus (p. 144), appears to have exaggerated the fear and alarm of the pope in his retreat from Ferrara to Florence, which is proved by the note to have been somewhat more decent and deliberate.

† Syropulus is pleased to reckon seven hundred prelates in the council of Basil. The error is manifest, and perhaps voluntary. That prelates

CHAP.
I. XVI.

Florence could produce the subscriptions of the pope himself, eight cardinals, two patriarchs, eight archbishops, fifty-two bishops, and forty-five abbots, or chiefs of religious orders. After the labour of nine months, and the debates of twenty-five sessions, they attained the advantage and glory of the re-union of the Greeks. Four principal questions had been agitated between the two churches: 1. The use of unleavened bread in the communion of Christ's body. 2. The nature of purgatory. 3. The supremacy of the pope. And, 4. The single or double procession of the Holy Ghost. The cause of either nation was managed by ten theological champions: the Latins were supported by the inexhaustible eloquence of cardinal Julian; and Mark of Ephesus and Bessarion of Nice were the bold and able leaders of the Greek forces. We may bestow some praise on the progress of human reason, by observing, that the first of these questions was now treated as an immaterial rite, which might innocently vary with the fashion of the age and country. With regard to the second, both parties were agreed in the belief of an intermediate state of purgation for the venial sins of the faithful; and whether their souls were purified by elemental fire was a doubtful point, which in a few years might be conveniently settled on the spot by the disputants. The claims of supremacy appeared of a more vague number could not be supplied by all the ecclesiastics of every degree who were present at the council, nor by all the absent bishops of the West, who, expressly or tacitly, might adhere to its decrees.

weighty and substantial kind; yet by the Orientals the Roman bishop had ever been respected as the first of the five patriarchs; nor did they scruple to admit, that his jurisdiction should be exercised agreeable to the holy canons; a vague allowance, which might be defused or eluded by occasional convenience. The procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father alone, or from the Father and the Son, was an article of faith which had sunk much deeper into the minds of men; and in the sessions of Ferrara and Florence, the Latin edition of Apostles was subdivided into two questions, whether it were legal, and whether it were orthodox. Perhaps it may not be necessary to boast on this subject of my own impartial indifference; but I must think, that the Greeks were strongly supported by the prohibition of the council of Chalcedon, against adding any article whatsoever to the creed of Nice, or rather of Constantinople.* In earthly affairs, it is not easy to conceive how an assembly of legislators can bind their successors, invested with powers equal to their own. But the dictates of inspiration must be true and unchangeable; nor should a private bishop, or a provincial synod, have presumed to innovate against the judgment of the catholic church. On the substance of the doctrine, the controversy was equal and endless: reason is confounded by the procession of a deity:

* The perjures, who disliked the union, were unwilling to ally from this among others (p. 128, 162, 195, 209, of Synopstis). The charge of the Latins was aggravated by their producing an old act of the second council of Nice, with Apostles in the Nicene creed. A palpable forgery! (p. 177).

CHAP.
LXXI.

the gospel which lay on the altar, was silent; the various texts of the fathers might be corrupted by fraud or entangled by sophistry; and the Greeks were ignorant of the characters and writings of the Latin saints.* Of this at least we may be sure, that neither side could be convinced by the arguments of their opponents. Prejudice may be enlightened by reason, and a superficial glance may be rectified by a clear and more perfect view of an object adapted to our faculties; but the bishops and monks had been taught from their infancy to repeat a form of mysterious words; their national and personal honour depended on the repetition of the same sounds; and their narrow minds were hardened and inflamed by the acrimony of a public dispute.

Wegscheide disputes with
the Greeks.

While they were lost in a cloud of dust and darkness, the pope and emperor were desirous of a seeming union, which could alone accomplish the purposes of their interview; and the obstinacy of public dispute was softened by the arts of private and personal negotiation. The patriarch Joseph had sunk under the weight of age and infirmities; his dying voice breathed the counsels of charity and concord, and his vacant bench might tempt the hopes of the ambitious clergy. The ready and active obedience of the archbishops of Russia and Nice, of Isidore and Bessarion, was prompted and recompensed by their speedy promotion to the dignity of cardinals. Bessarion, in the first de-hates, had stood forth the most strenuous and eloquent champion of the Greek church; and if the apostate, the bastard, was reprobated by his country,<sup>1</sup> he appears in ecclesiastical story a rare example of a patriot who was recommended to court-favour by loud opposition and well-timed compliance. With the aid of his two spiritual counsellors, the emperor applied his arguments to the general situation and personal characters of the bishops, and each was successively moved by authority and example. Their revenues were in the hands of the Turks, their persons in those of the Latins; an episcopal treasure, three robes and forty ducats, was soon exhausted:<sup>2</sup> the hopes of their return still depended on the ships of Venice and the alms of Rome; and such was their indigence, that their arrears, the payment of a debt, would be accepted as a favour, and might operate as a bribe.<sup>3</sup> The danger and relief of Constantinople might excuse some prudent and pious dissimulation; and it was insinuated, that the obstinate heretics who should resist the consent of the

* The pope could not command Gregory to do so, nor could Adrian & Agapetus visit the east, &c. &c. see also Gregory's treatise (Hyrcopolis, p. 109). See the perplexity of the Greeks (p. 217, 219, 222, 223, 273).

<sup>1</sup> See the public altercation of Mark and Basilian in Syraculus (p. 157), who never dissimulate the claim of his own party, and fully praise the virtues of the Latins.

<sup>2</sup> For the poverty of the Greek bishops, see a remarkable passage of Ducas (c. 31). One had possessed, for his whole property, three old garments, &c. By teaching one-and-twenty years in his monastery, Basilian himself had collected forty gold scutins; but of these, the archbishop had expended twenty-eight in his voyage from Peloponnesus, and the remainder at Constantinople (Syraculus, p. 127).

<sup>3</sup> Syraculus denies that the Greeks received any money before they had subscribed the act of union (p. 183); yet he mentions some suspicious circumstances; and their bribery and corruption are positively affirmed by the historian Ducas.

CHAP.
LXVI.

East and West, would be abandoned in a hostile land to the revenge or justice of the Roman pontiff.<sup>3</sup> In the first private assembly of the Greeks, the formulary of union was approved by twenty-four, and rejected by twelve, members; but the five cross-bearers of St. Sophia, who aspired to represent the patriarch, were disqualified by ancient discipline; and their right of voting was transferred to an obsequious train of monks, grammarians, and profane laymen. The will of the monarch produced a false and servile unanimity, and no more than two patriots had courage to speak their own sentiments and those of their country. Demetrius, the emperor's brother, retired to Venice, that he might not be witness of the union; and Mark of Ephesus, mistaking perhaps his pride for his conscience, disclaimed all communion with the Latin heretics, and avowed himself the champion and confessor of the orthodox creed.<sup>4</sup> In the treaty between the two nations, several forms of consent were proposed, such as might satisfy the Latins, without dishonouring the Greeks; and they weighed the scruples of words and syllables, till the theological balance trembled with a slight preponderance in favour of the Vatican. It was agreed (I must interest the attention of the reader), that the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Father and the Son, as from one principle and one substance; that he proceeds by the Son, being of the same nature and substance, and that he proceeds from the Father and the Son, by one spiration and production. It is less difficult to understand the articles of the preliminary treaty; that the pope should defray all the expences of the Greeks in their return home; that he should annually maintain two gallees and three hundred soldiers for the defence of Constantinople; that all the ships which transported pilgrims to Jerusalem should be obliged to touch at that port; that as often as they were required, the pope should furnish ten gallees for a year, or twenty for six months; and that he should powerfully solicit the princes of Europe, if the emperor had occasion for land-forces.

<sup>3</sup> The Greeks must seriously reprove their own kind of exile and perpetual slavery (Seydoux, p. 196); and they were strongly moved by the emperor's threat (p. 207).

<sup>4</sup> I had forgot another popular and orthodox promoter: a Ciceronian sound, who usually lay quiet on the foot-stool of the emperor's throne; but who talked most furiously while the act of union was reading, without being altered by the soothing or the lashes of the great ecclesiastic (Seydoux, p. 262, 266).

The same year, and almost the same day, were marked by the deposition of Eugenius at Basil; and, at Florence, by his re-union of the Greeks and Latins. In the former synod (which he styled indeed an assembly of demons), the pope was branded with the guilt of simony, perjury, tyranny, heresy, and schism;* and declared to be incurable in his vices, unworthy of any title, and incapable of holding any ecclesiastical office. To the latter he was revered as the true and holy vicar of Christ, who, after a separation of six hundred years, had reconciled the catholics of the East

Eugenius
deposed at Basil,
A. D. 1439,
June 22.

Re-union of the Greeks
at Florence,
A. D. 1439,
July 6.

* From the original Letters of the Popes, in Muratori's Collection (tom. iii, p. 2, tom. xix), the manners of Eugenius it appears to have been decent, and even exemplary. His situation, exposed to the world and to his enemies, was a poenitent, and is a pledge.

CHAP.
LXVL

and West, in one fold, and under one shepherd. The act of union was subscribed by the pope, the emperor, and the principal members of both churches; even by those who, like Syropulus,<sup>3</sup> had been deprived of the right of voting. Two copies might have sufficed for the East and West; but Eugenius was not satisfied, unless four authentic and similar transcripts were signed and attested as the monuments of his victory.<sup>4</sup> On a memorable day, the sixth of July, the successors of St. Peter and Constantine ascended their thrones; the two nations assembled in the cathedral of Florence; their representatives, cardinal Julian and Bessarion archbishop of Nice, appeared in the pulpit, and after reading in their respective tongues the act of union, they mutually embraced, in the name and the presence of the applauding brethren. The pope and his ministers then officiated according to the Roman liturgy: the creed was chanted with the addition of filioque; the acquiescence of the Greeks was poorly excused by their ignorance of the harmonious, but inarti-

<sup>3</sup> Syropulus, rather than subscribe, would have assented, as the least evil, at the ceremony of the union. He was compelled to do both; and the great ecclesiarch poorly rewarded his volubility to the emperor (p. 290-297).

<sup>4</sup> None of these original acts of union can at present be produced. Of the two sets that are preserved (one at Rome, and the remainder at Florence, Bologna, Venice, Paris, and London) nine have been examined by an accurate critic (M. de Bréquigny), who condemns them for the variety and imperfections of the Greek signatures. Yet several of these may be esteemed as authentic copies, which were subscribed at Florence, before Christ August 1439, the final separation of the pope and emperor (Mémoires de l'Académie des Inscriptions, tom. XIII, p. 297-311).

culate, sounds;<sup>4</sup> and the more scrupulous Latins refused any public celebration of the Byzantine rite. Yet the emperor and his clergy were not totally unmindful of national honour. The treaty was ratified by their consent: it was tacitly agreed that no innovation should be attempted in their creed or ceremonies; they spared, and secretly respected, the generous firmness of Mark of Ephesus; and, on the decease of the patriarch, they refused to elect his successor, except in the cathedral of St. Sophia. In the distribution of public and private rewards, the liberal pontiff exceeded their hopes and his promises: the Greeks, with less pomp and pride, returned by the same road of Ferrara and Venice; and their reception at Constantinople was such as will be described in the following chapter.* The success of the first trial encouraged Eugenius to repeat the same edifying scenes; and the deputies of the Armenians, the Maronites, the Jacobites of Syria and Egypt, the Nestorians, and the Ethiopians, were successively introduced, to kiss the feet of the Roman pontiff, and to announce the obedience and the orthodoxy of the East. These Oriental embassies, unknown in the countries which they presumed to represent,<sup>7</sup> diffused over the West the fame of Euge-their return to Constantinople.

A. D. 1454,
Feb. 1.

<sup>4</sup> Ita per diu de sacris ceremoniis quærent (Symonides, p. 297).

<sup>5</sup> In their return, the Greeks conversed at Bologna with the academicians of England; and after some questions and answers, these impartial strangers laughed at the pretended union of Florence (Symonides, p. 307).

<sup>7</sup> So nugatory, or rather so fabulous, are these reunions of the Nestorians, Jacobites, &c. that I have named above, without success, the Bibliotheca Orientalis of Assemanus, a faithful slave of the Vatican,

CHAP.
LXVI.

Final peace
of the church.
A. D. 1449.

State of the Greek language at Constantinople.
A. D. 1500-
1421.

nus: and a clamour was artfully propagated against the remnant of a schism in Switzerland and Savoy, which alone impeded the harmony of the christian world. The vigour of opposition was succeeded by the lassitude of despair: the council of Basil was silently dissolved; and Fælix, renouncing the tiara, again withdrew to the devout or delicious hermitage of Ripaille.*

A general peace was secured by mutual acts of oblivion and indemnity: all ideas of reformation subsided; the popes continued to exercise and abuse their ecclesiastical despotism; nor has Rome been since disturbed by the mischiefs of a contested election.†

The journeys of three emperors were unavailing for their temporal, or perhaps their spiritual, salvation; but they were productive of a beneficial consequence; the revival of the Greek learning in Italy, from whence it was propagated to the last nations of the west and north. In their lowest servitude and depression, the subjects of the Byzan-

* Ripaille is situated east Thoiry in Savoy, on the southern side of the lake of Geneva. It is now a Carthusian abbey; and Mr. Addison (Travels into Italy, vol. ii. p. 141-148 of Baskerville's edition of his works) has celebrated the place and the founder. Æneas Sylvius, and the fathers of Basil, applaud the austere life of the sacred hermit; but the French and Italian prelates most ardently attack the popular opinion of his sanctity.

† In this account of the councils of Basil, Ferrara, and Florence, I have consulted the original acts, which fill the seventeenth and eighteenth volumes of the edition of Venice, and are cited by the perspicuous, though partial, history of Augustin Patruinus, an Italian of the sixteenth century. They are digested and abridged by Dupin Catholicæ Ecclesiæ tom. xlii and two continuators of Fleury (Ann. xxi) and the respect of the Gallican church for the ancient papal constitution their members to an unwearied moderation.

fine throne were still possessed of a golden key CHAP.
LXVL
that could unlock the treasures of antiquity; of a musical and prolific language, that gives a soul to the objects of sense, and a body to the abstractions of philosophy. Since the barriers of the monarchy, and even of the capital, had been trampled under foot, the various barbarians had doubtless corrupted the form and substance of the national dialect; and ample glossaries have been composed, to interpret a multitude of words of Arabic, Turkish, Slavonian, Latin, or French origin.<sup>1</sup> But a purer idiom was spoken in the court, and taught in the college; and the flourishing state of the language is described, and perhaps embellished, by a learned Italian,<sup>2</sup> who, by a long residence and noble marriage,<sup>3</sup> was naturalized at Constantinople about thirty years before the Turkish conquest. "The vulgar speech," says Philel-

<sup>1</sup> In the first attempt, Maurizius collected 3600 Græco-barbarum words, to which, in a second edition, he subjoined 1900 more; yet what plantains glimmings did he leave to Porcius, Durange, Fabreius, the Bodinians, &c. (Faber, Bibliot. Græc. tom. 1, p. 191, &c.). Some Persian words may be found in Kamastrus, and some Latin ones in Phileas; and even to the inevitable effect of war and commerce; but the form and substance of the language were not affected by this slight alloy.

<sup>2</sup> The life of Francis Philalpinus, a sophist, proud, restless, and rapacious, has been diligently composed by Lancelot (Mémoires de l'Académie des Inscriptions, tom. x, p. 691-751) and Tiraboschi (Storia della Letteratura Italiana, tom. vi., p. 282-294), for the most part from his own letters. His elaborate writings, and those of his contemporaries, are forgotten: but their familiar epistles still describe the men and the times.

<sup>3</sup> He married, and had perhaps debauched, the daughter of John, and the grand-daughter of Manuel Chrysolorus. She was young, beautiful, and wealthy; and her noble family was allied to the Doctes of Cepus and the emperors of Constantinople.

CHAP.
XLVI

plus," "has been depraved by the people, and
 "infected by the multitude of strangers and mer"chants, who every day flock to the city, and "mingle with the inhabitants. It is from the "disciples of such a school that the Latin lan"guage received the versions of Aristotle and "Plato, so obscure in sense, and in spirit so "poor. But the Greeks who have escaped the "contagion are those whom we follow; and they "alone are worthy of our imitation. In familiar "discourse, they still speak the tongue of Aristo-"phanes and Euripides, of the historians and "philosophers of Athens; and the style of their "writings is still more elaborate and correct.
 "The persons who, by their birth and offices, are "attached to the Byzantine court, are those who "maintain, with the least alloy, the ancient "standard of elegance and purity; and the un-
 "dive graces of language most conspicuously shine
 "among the noble matrons, who are excluded "from all intercourse with foreigners. With "foreigners, do I say? They live retired and se"questered from the eyes of their fellow-citizens.
 "Seldom are they seen in the streets; and when "they leave their houses, it is in the dusk of * *Græci quibus lingua depravata non sit . . . . In frequentar vulgo hæc etiam temperate ut Aristophanes comicus, aut Euripides tragicos, ut oratores acceperit ut historiographi ut philosophi . . . . Inter autem homines et doctos et eruditissimos . . . . Nam dicti antici veteres nonnulli dignitatem etiam elegantiam retinebant In primisque Ipse nobilis mulierum; quibus cum nullum esset amicum cum viris peregrinis commercium, minus illis ac potius Germanum utitur servatur intus (Philosoph. Epist. ad rom. 145), apud Huetum, p. 166.

 1693. He observes in another passage, *etiam illæ non Thæracæ lo-cutiones sent admodum moderatè et castè et æquè Antici.

“ evening, on visits to the churches and their “ nearest kindred. On these occasions, they “ are on horseback, covered with a veil, and “ encompassed by their parents, their husbands, “ or their servants.”

CHAP.
 LXVI.

Among the Greeks, a numerous and opulent clergy was dedicated to the service of religion: their monks and bishops have ever been distinguished by the gravity and austerity of their manners; nor were they diverted, like the Latin priests, by the pursuits and pleasures of a secular, and even military, life. After a large deduction for the time and talents that were lost in the devotion, the laziness, and the discord, of the church and cloister, the more inquisitive and ambitious minds would explore the sacred and profane erudition of their native language. The ecclesiastics presided over the education of youth; the schools of philosophy and eloquence were perpetuated till the fall of the empire; and it may be affirmed, that more books and more knowledge were included within the walls of Constantinople, than could be dispersed over the extensive countries of the West.* But an important distinction has been Comparison of the Greeks and Latins.
 already noticed: the Greeks were stationary or retrograde, while the Latins were advancing with a rapid and progressive motion. The nations were excited by the spirit of independence and emula-

* Philoſophy, abſolutely enough, derives this Greek or Oriental jealouſy from the manners of ancient Rome.

* See the ſtate of learning in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, in the learned and judicious Memoirs (Hift. Nat. Eccleſ. p. 424-440, 490-494).

CHAP.
LXVI.

tion; and even the little world of the Italian states contained more people and industry than the decreasing circle of the Byzantine empire. In Europe, the lower ranks of society were relieved from the yoke of feudal servitude; and freedom is the first step to curiosity and knowledge. The use, however rude and corrupt, of the Latin tongue had been preserved by superstition; the universities, from Bologna to Oxford,<sup>a</sup> were peopled with thousands of scholars; and their misguided ardour might be directed to more liberal and manly studies. In the resurrection of science, Italy was the first that cast away her shroud; and the eloquent Petrarch, by his lessons and his example, may justly be applauded as the first harbinger of day. A purer style of composition, a more generous and rational strain of sentiment, flowed from the study and imitation of the writers of ancient Rome; and the disciples of Cicero and Virgil approached, with reverence and love, the sanctuary of their Grecian masters. In the sack of Constantinople, the French, and even the Venetians, had despised and destroyed the works of Lysippus and Homer; the monuments of art may be annihilated by a single blow; but the immortal mind is renewed and multiplied by the copies of the pen; and such copies it was the ambition of Petrarch and his friends to possess and understand. The arms of the Turks undoubtedly pressed the flight of the muses; yet we may tremble at the thought, that Greece might have been overwhelmed, with her schools and libraries, before Europe had emerged from the deluge of barbarism, that the seeds of science might have been scattered by the winds, before the Italian soil was prepared for their cultivation.

<sup>a</sup> At the end of the fifteenth century, there existed in Europe about fifty universities, and of these the foundation of ten or twelve is prior to the year 1100. They were crowded in proportion to their scarcity. Bologna contained 10,000 students, chiefly of the civil law. In the year 1357, the number at Oxford had decreased from 20,000 to 9000 scholars (Henry's History of Great Britain, vol. iv, p. 478). Yet even this decrease is much superior to the present list of the numbers of the university.

The most learned Italians of the fifteenth century have confessed and applauded the restoration of Greek literature, after a long oblivion of many hundred years.<sup>2</sup> Yet in that country, and beyond the Alps, some names are quoted; some profound scholars, who in the darker ages were honourably distinguished by their knowledge of the Greek tongue; and national vanity has been loud in the praise of such rare examples of erudition. Without scrutinizing the merit of individuals, truth must observe, that their science is without a cause, and without an effect; that it was easy for them to satisfy themselves and their more ignorant contemporaries; and that the idiom, which they had so marvellously acquired, was transcribed in few manuscripts, and was not taught in any university of the West. In a corner

CHAP.
LXVI.

Revival of the Greek Learning in Italy.

<sup>2</sup> Of those writers who professedly treat of the restoration of the Greek Learning in Italy, the two principal are Budæus, De Graecæ Illustratione, Linguae Graecæ Literarumque Institutionum Institutionibus, Londini, 1743, in large octavo, and Tiraboschi (Storia della Letteratura Italiana, tom. 3, p. 344-357, tom. 4, p. 113-143). The Oxford publisher is a laborious scholar, but the illustration of Budæus enjoys the superiority of a modern and national historian.

CHAP.
LXVI.

Lives of Barlaam,
i. p. 1138.

of Italy, it faintly existed as the popular, or at least as the ecclesiastical, dialect.* The first impression of the Doric and Ionic colonies has never been completely erased: the Calabrian churches were long attached to the throne of Constantinople; and the monks of St. Basil pursued their studies in mount Athos and the schools of the East. Calabria was the native country of Barlaam, who has already appeared as a sectary and an ambassador; and Barlaam was the first who revived, beyond the Alps, the memory, or at least the writings, of Homer.† He is described, by Petrarch and Boccace,‡ as a man of a diminutive stature, though truly great in the measure of learning and genius; of a piercing discernment, though of a slow and painful elocution. For many ages (as they affirm) Greece had not produced his equal in the knowledge of history, grammar, and philosophy; and his merit was celebrated in the attestations of the princes and doctors of Constantinople. One of these attestations is still extant; and the emperor Cantacuzene, the protector of his adversaries, is forced to allow, that Euclid, Aristotle, and Plato,

* In Calabria quæ olim magna Græcia dicebatur, excolitis Græci reperiuntur, conservant quædam linguæ veteris cognitiō (Hædlin, p. 2). If it was eradicated by the Romans, it was revived and perpetuated by the monks of St. Basil, who possessed seven convents at Rossano alone (Giondino, Istoria di Napoli, tom. i. p. 340).

† If Bochart says Petrarch, the French and Germany etc, non dicunt Homerum sed nomen Homeri audierunt. Perhaps, in that respect, the thirteenth century was less happy than the age of Charlemagne.

‡ See the character of Barlaam, in Boccaccio de Genealogia Deorum, l. xiv. c. 6.

were familiar to that profound and subtle logician.* In the court of Avignon, he formed an intimate connection with Petrarch,† the first of the Latin scholars; and the desire of mutual instruction was the principle of their literary commerce. The Tuscan applied himself with eager curiosity and assiduous diligence to the study of the Greek language; and in a laborious struggle with the dryness and difficulty of the first rudiments, he began to reach the sense, and to feel the spirit, of poets and philosophers, whose minds were congenial to his own. But he was soon deprived of the society and lessons of this useful assistant: Barlaam relinquished his fruitless embassy; and, on his return to Greece, he rashly provoked the swarms of fanatic monks, by attempting to substitute the light of reason to that of their navel. After a separation of three years, the two friends again met in the court of Naples; but the generous pupil renounced the fairest occasion of improvement; and by his recommendation Barlaam was finally settled in a small bishopric of his native Calabria.‡ The manifold avocations of Petrarch, love and friendship, his

CHAP.
LXVI

Studies of Petrarch,
i. n. 1239-
1274.

* Cantabrigia, l. ii. c. 36.

† For the connection of Petrarch and Barlaam, and the two interviews, at Avignon in 1339, and at Naples in 1347, see the excellent Mémoires sur la Vie de Pétrarque, tom. i. p. 406-410, tom. ii. p. 73-77.

‡ The bishopric to which Barlaam retired was the old Luani, in the middle ages Sancta Cyriaca, and by corruption Hicocinium. Greece (Dissert. Chorographica Italiae medii ævi, p. 317). The ruins upon of the Roman times soon lapsed into poverty, since even the church was poor; yet the town still contains 3000 inhabitants (Geograph. p. 350).

CHAP.
LXVI.

various correspondence and frequent journeys, the Roman laurel, and his elaborate compositions in prose and verse, in Latin and Italian, diverted him from a foreign idiom; and as he advanced in life, the attainment of the Greek language was the object of his wishes, rather than of his hopes. When he was about fifty years of age, a Byzantine ambassador, his friend, and a master of both tongues, presented him with a copy of Homer; and the answer of Petrarch is at once expressive of his eloquence, gratitude, and regret. After celebrating the generosity of the donor, and the value of a gift more precious in his estimation than gold or rubies, he thus proceeds:

"Your present of the genuine and original text
 "of the divine poet, the fountain of all invention,
 "is worthy of yourself and of me: you have "fulfilled your promise, and satisfied my desires.
 "Yet your liberality is still imperfect; with "Homer you should have given me yourself; a "guide, who could lead me into the fields of "light, and disclose to my wondering eyes the "spacious miracles of the Iliad and Odyssey.
 "But, alas! Homer is dumb, or I am deaf; nor "is it in my power to enjoy the beauty which I "possess. I have seated him by the side of Plato,
 "the prince of poets near the prince of philoso"phers; and I glory in the sight of my illustrious "guests. Of their immortal writings, whatever "had been translated into the Latin idiom, I had "already acquired; but if there be no profit,
 "there is some pleasure, in beholding these "venerable Greeks in their proper and national "habit. I am delighted with the aspect of

"Homer; and as often as I embrace the silent CHAP.
 "volume, I exclaim, with a sigh, Illustrions LXVI
 "bard! with what pleasure should I listen to "thy song, if my sense of hearing were not ob"structed and lost by the death of one friend,
 "and in the much lamentable absence of an"other! Nor do I yet despair; and the example "of Cato suggests some comfort and hope, since "it was in the last period of age that he at"tained the knowledge of the Greek letters."<sup>2</sup>

The prize which eluded the efforts of Petrarch OF BOCCACCIO, was obtained by the fortune and industry of his b. m. 1313, friend Boccaccio,* the father of the Tuscan prose.
 That popular writer, who derives his reputation from the Decameron, an hundred novels of plen-santry and love, may aspire to the more serious praise of restoring, in Italy, the study of the Greek language. In the year one thousand three hundred and sixty, a disciple of Barlaam, whose name was Leo, or Leontius Pilatus, was detained in his way to Avignon by the advice and hospitality of Boccaccio, who lodged the stranger in

* I will transcribe a passage from this epistle of Petrarch, (Famili. ita.
 7), Domini Homerum non in alienum sermone violente abire deri-vatum, sed ex ipsius firmo eloqui sententia, bisquis dicitur ille productum ingenio. . . . Sine tua voce Homerus tunc apud me moratur, immo vero ego apud illum sedulus sum. Gaudet tamen vel adspici tibi, ac super illum amplexus aequo suspirans dico. O magne viri, &c.

* For the life and writings of Boccaccio, who was born in 1313, and died in 1375, Fabricius (Bibliot. Latin. mado. &c., tom. 1. p. 246, Ar.) and Tirabouchi (tom. 4, p. 83, 429-431), may be consulted. The editions, versions, imitations, of his works, are numerous. For he was induced to communicate these writings, and perhaps scandalous, work to Petrarch, his respectable friend, in whose letters and answers he conspicuously appears.

CHAP.
XXVI.

his house, prevailed on the republic of Florence to allow him an annual stipend, and devoted his leisure to the first Greek professor, who taught that language in the western countries of Europe.

Leo Pilatus, first Greek professor in Florence and in the West,
A. D. 1383.
1383.

The appearance of Leo might disgust the most eager disciple; he was clothed in the mantle of a philosopher, or a mendicant; his countenance was hideous; his face was overshadowed with black hair; his beard long and uncombed; his deportment rustic; his temper gloomy and inconstant; nor could he grace his discourse with the ornaments, or even the perspicuity, of Latin elocution. But his mind was stored with a treasure of Greek learning; history and fable, philosophy and grammar, were alike at his command; and he read the poems of Homer in the schools of Florence. It was from his explanation that Boccace composed and transcribed a literal prose version of the Iliad and Odyssey, which satisfied the thirst of his friend Petrarch, and which perhaps, in the succeeding century, was clandestinely used by Laurentius Valla, the Latin interpreter. It was from his narratives that the same Boccace collected the materials for his treatise on the genealogy of the heathen gods, a work, in that age, of stupendous erudition, and which he ostentatiously sprinkled with Greek characters and passages, to excite the wonder and applause of his more ignorant readers.* The first steps of learning are slow and laborious; no more than ten votaries of Homer could be enumerated in all Italy; and neither Rome, nor Venice, nor Naples, could add a single name to this studious catalogue. But their numbers would have multiplied, their progress would have been accelerated, if the inconstant Leo, at the end of three years, had not relinquished an honourable and beneficial station. In his passage, Petrarch entertained him at Padua a short time; he enjoyed the scholar, but was justly offended with the gloomy and unsocial temper of the man. Discontented with the world and with himself, Leo depreciated his present enjoyments, while absent persons and objects were dear to his imagination. In Italy he was a Thessalian, in Greece a native of Calabria; in the company of the Latins he disdained their language, religion, and manner; no sooner was he landed at Constantinople, than he again sighed for the wealth of Venice and the elegance of Florence. His Italian friends were deaf to his importunity; he depended on their curiosity and indulgence, and embarked on a second voyage; but on his entrance into the Adriatic, the ship was assailed by a tempest, and the unfortunate teacher, who, like Ulysses, had fastened himself to the mast, was struck dead by a flash of lightning. The humane Petrarch dropt a tear on his disaster; but he was most anxious to learn whether some copy of Euripides or Sophocles might not be saved from the hands of the mariners.*

* Boccaccio indulges in human vanity; Ottobrunensis caudæ Græcæ exornatæ adscriptæ &c. . . . jure utat mox; cunctis aut hoc donat rursus gloriæ collectis inter Etruscos Græcæ uti carminibus. Nicotus ago ad quæ Leo Antonii Pilatum, &c. (the Genealogia Deorum, l. xv, c. 7, a work which, though now forgotten, has run through thirteen or fourteen editions).

* Lamentation of Leo Petrus, is sufficiently made known by Huet (p. 241) and the Abbe de Sade (Vie de Petrusque, tom. III. p. 422-424).

CHAP.
LXVI.

Foundation
of the Greek language in Italy by Manuel Chrysoloras.
Ann.
L. n. 1330-
1412.

But the faint rudiments of Greek learning, which Petrarch had encouraged and Boccace had planted, soon withered and expired. The succeeding generation was content for a while with the improvement of Latin eloquence; nor was it before the end of the fourteenth century, that a new and perpetual flame was rekindled in Italy.<sup>d</sup> Precious to his own journey, the emperor Manuel dispatched his envoys and orators to implore the compassion of the western princes. Of these envoys, the most conspicuous, or the most learned, was Manuel Chrysoloras,<sup>e</sup> of noble birth, and whose Roman ancestors are supposed to have migrated with the great Constantine. After visiting the courts of France and England, where he obtained some contrilutions, and more promises, the envoy was invited to assume the office of a professor; and Florence had again the honour of this second invitation. By his knowledge not only of the Greek, but of the Latin tongue, Chrysoloras deserved the stipend, and surpassed the expectation, of the republic. His school was frequented by a crowd of disciples of

CIL. 670-673), who has very happily caught the lively and dramatic manner of his original.

<sup>d</sup> Ibid. Hody (p. 54) is angry with Leonard Aretin, Constantine, Paulus Jactus, &c. for asserting that the Greek letters were restored in Italy post-wyftogratius mense; as it, says he, they had flourished till the end of the seventh century. These writers most probably reckoned from the last period of the barbarities and the passage of the Greek magistrates and troops at Ravenna and Rome must have preserved, in some degree, the use of their native tongue.

<sup>e</sup> See the article of Emanuel, or Manuel Chrysoloras, in Hody (p. 12-34) and Tiraboschi istm. vol. p. 113-119). The precise date of his arrival here between the years 1330 and 1400, and is only marked by the reign of Boniface ix.

every rank and age; and one of these, in a general history, has described his motives and his success. "At that time," says Leonard Aretin,*

"I was a student of the civil law; but my soul
"was inflamed with the love of letters; and I "bestowed some application on the sciences of "logic and rhetoric. On the arrival of Manuel
"I hesitated whether I should desert my legal "studies, or relinquish this golden opportunity;
"and thus, in the ardour of youth, I communed
"with my own mind—Wilt thou be wanting "to thyself and thy fortune? Wilt thou refuse "to be introduced to a familiar converse with "Homer, Plato, and Demosthenes? with those "poets, philosophers, and orators, of whom "such wonders are related, and who are celebrated by every age as the great masters of "human science? Of professors and scholars "in civil law, a sufficient supply will always be "found in our universities; but a teacher, and "such a teacher, of the Greek language, if he "once be suffered to escape, may never afterwards be retrieved. Convinced by these reasons, I gave myself to Chrysolorus; and so "strong was my passion, that the lessons which "I had imbibed in the day were the constant

* The name of Aretino has been assumed by six or six nations of Jews in Turkey, of whom the most famous and the most worthless lived in the seventeenth century. Leonardo Bruno Aretino, the disciple of Chrysolorus, was a Hebraist, an orator, and an historian, the secretary of that emperor's papers, and the chamberlain of the republic of Florence, where he died, a. n. 1444, at the age of seventy-two (Peters, Recherches sur l'Hist. de la Turc., tom. 1, p. 190, &c. Tiraboschi, tom. vii, p. 33-34).

CHAP.
LXVI.

"subject of my nightly dreams."<sup>3</sup> At the same time and place, the Latin classics were explained by John of Ravenna, the domestic pupil of Petrarch;<sup>4</sup> the Italians, who illustrated their age and country, were formed in this double school; and Florence became the fruitful seminary of Greek and Roman erudition.<sup>5</sup> The presence of the emperor recalled Chrysoloras from the college to the court, but he afterwards taught at Pavia and Rome with equal industry and applause. The remainder of his life, about fifteen years, was divided between Italy and Constantinople, between embassies and lessons. In the noble office of enlightening a foreign nation, the grammarian was not unmindful of a more sacred duty to his prince and country; and Emanuel Chrysoloras died at Constance, on a public mission from the emperor to the council.

The Greek
in Italy,
A. D. 1400-
1500.

After his example, the restoration of the Greek letters in Italy was prosecuted by a series of emigrants, who were destitute of fortune, and endowed with learning, or at least with language.

<sup>3</sup> See the passage in Arctii. Commentarii Barum suo Tempore in Italia gestarum, apud Hoesium, p. 28-30.

<sup>4</sup> In this domestic discipline, Petrarch, who loved the youth, often complains of the eager curiosity, restless temper, and proud feelings, which anticipate the genius and glory of a riper age (Memoires sur Petrarque, tom. II, p. 700-703).

<sup>5</sup> Hinc Oratores Latineque scholæ exoriri cœpit. Quintus Philolophus, Leonardus Arctius, Carolusque, et perique alii moxquam ex eorum Trojano prodromulibus, quatuor emulatione multa ingenia diuturnæ et laudis exortibus sunt (Plinius in Bonifacio &c.). Another Italian writer adds the names of Paulus Petrus Viperinus, Grægorius Viperinus, Foggino, Franciscus Barbarus, &c. But I question whether a right chronology would allow Chrysoloras all these eminent scholars (Hoesius, p. 28-37, &c.).

From the terror or oppression of the Turkish arms, the natives of Thessalonica and Constantinople escaped to a land of freedom, curiosity, and wealth. The synod introduced into Florence the lights of the Greek church and the oracles of the Platonic philosophy; and the fugitives who adhered to the union had the double merit of renouncing their country, not only for the christian, but for the catholic, cause. A patriot, who sacrifices his party and conscience to the allurements of favour, may be possessed, however, of the private and social virtues: he no longer bears the reproachful epithets of slave and apostate; and the consideration which he acquires among his new associates, will restore in his own eyes the dignity of his character. The prudent conformity of Bessarion was rewarded with the Roman purple: he fixed his residence in Italy, and the Greek cardinal, the titular patriarch of Constantinople, was respected as the chief and protector of his nation:<sup>a</sup> his abilities were exercised in the legations of Bologna, Venice, Germany, and France; and his election to the chair of St. Peter floated for a moment on the uncertain breath of a conclave.<sup>b</sup> His ecclesiastical honours diffused a splendour and pre-eminence over his literary merit and service:

CHAP.
LXVI.

Cardinal
Bessarion,
&c.

<sup>a</sup> See in Italy the article of Bessarion (p. 156-177). Theodore Gaza, George of Trichinod, and the rest of the Greeks whom I have named or omitted, are inserted in their proper places of his learned work. See likewise Tardouchi, in the first and second parts of the sixth tome.

<sup>b</sup> The cardinals knocked at his door, but his conclave refused to be interrupted by the studies of Bessarion: "Nicholas," said he, "thy respect has cost thee an hat, and now the door."

CHAP.
LXVI.Their faults and merits.

his palace was a school; as often as the cardinal visited the Vatican, he was attended by a learned train of both nations;* of men applauded by themselves and the public; and whose writings, now overspread with dust, were popular and useful in their own times. I shall not attempt to enumerate the restorers of Grecian literature in the fifteenth century; and it may be sufficient to mention with gratitude the names of Theodore Gaza, of George of Trebizond, of John Argyropulus, and Demetrius Chalcocondyles, who taught their native language in the schools of Florence and Rome. Their labours were not inferior to those of Bessarion, whose purple they revered, and whose fortune was the secret object of their envy. But the lives of these grammarians were humble and obscure; they had declined the lucrative paths of the church: their dress and manners secluded them from the commerce of the world; and since they were confined to the merit, they might be content with the rewards, of learning. From this character, Janus Lascaris<sup>2</sup> will deserve an exception. His eloquence, politeness, and imperial descent, recommended him to the French monarchs; and in the same cities he was alternately employed to teach and to negotiate. Duty and interest prompted them to cultivate the study of the Latin language; and the most successful attained the faculty of writing and speaking with fluency and elegance in a foreign idiom. But they ever retained the inveterate vanity of their country: their praise, or at least their esteem, was reserved for the national writers, to whom they owed their fame and subsistence; and they sometimes betrayed their contempt in licentious criticism or satire on Virgil's poetry and the oratory of Tully.* The superiority of these masters arose from the familiar use of a living language; and their first disciples were incapable of discerning how far they had degenerated from the knowledge, and even the practice, of their ancestors. A vicious pronunciation,† which they introduc-

* Such as George of Trebizond, Theodore Gaza, Argyropulus Anagnostes of Theodanica, Philolophus, Poggins, Blundus, Nicholas Peres, Valla, Campanus, Platina, &c. Vici says Hüb. with the phrase ut a scholasticis multo vero parum (p. 156).

<sup>2</sup> He was born before the taking of Constantinople, but his honourable life was stretched far into the sixteenth century (p. n. 1235). Louis and Francis were his native patrons, under whose auspices he founded the Greek colleges of Rome and Paris (ibid. p. 247-278). He left posterity in France; but the counts de Vintimille, and their numerous branches, derive the name of Lascaris from a doubtful marriage in the thirteenth century with the daughter of a Greek emperor (Ducange, Fam. Byzant. p. 231-232).

* Two of his epigrams against Virgil, and three against Tully, are preserved and related by Frontinus Floridus, who can find no better names than Greculus (hupens et hupidens) (Idi. p. 214). In our own time, an English critic has accused the Æneid of containing misra (longitudo, uliginosa, sparsa) et insignita (carminale heros) deserta; many such verses as he, the said Jeremiah Markland, would have been ashamed to recite (Quæst. ad Scal. Sylvar. p. 21, 22).

† Eusebius Chrysostomus, and his colleagues, are accused of ignorance, envy, or malice (Syllog. &c. tom. II. p. 215). The modern Greeks pronounce the ε as a υ (εισηνεμα), and confound three vowels (α, ι, υ), and several diphthongs. Such was the vulgar pronunciation which the steris Gardines maintained by penal statutes in the university of Cambridge; but the unconquerable α represented to an Attic as the bleating of sheep, and a belly-acher is better evidence than a bishop or a chanon. The mistakes of these scholars, particularly Kommus, who carried a more classical pronunciation, are collected in the Syllage of Harvæcamp. (9 vol. in octavo, Lond. Bat. 1726, 1740): but it is

—difficile

CHAP.
LXVI.

ed. was banished from the schools by the reason of the succeeding age. Of the power of the Greek accents they were ignorant, and those musical notes, which, from an Attic tongue, and to an Attic ear, must have been the secret soul of harmony, were to their eyes, as to our own, no more than minute and unmeaning marks, in prose superfluous, and troublesome in verse. The art of grammar they truly possessed; the valuable fragments of Apollonius and Herodian were transfused into their lessons; and their treatises of syntax and etymology, though devoid of philosophic spirit, are still useful to the Greek student. In the shipwreck of the Byzantine libraries, each fugitive seized a fragment of treasure, a copy of some author, who, without his industry, might have perished: the transcripts were multiplied by an assiduous, and sometimes an elegant, pen; and the text was corrected and explained by their own comments, or those of the elder scholiasts. The sense, though not the spirit, of the Greek classics, was interpreted to the Latin world: the beauties of style evaporate in a version; but the judgment of Theodore Gaza selected the more solid works of Aristotle and Theophrastus, and their natural histories of animals and plants opened a rich fund of genuine and experimental science.

The Platonists philosophy.

Yet the fleeting shadows of metaphysics were pursued with more curiosity and ardour. After a difficult to pains made by words, and in their reference to modern use, they can be understood only by their respective countrymen. We may observe, that our peculiar pronunciation of the Α, Η, is approved by Erasmus (ibem. li. p. 130).

long oblivion, Plato was revived in Italy by a venerable Greek,* who taught in the house of Cosmo of Medici. While the synod of Florence was involved in theological debate, some beneficial consequences might flow from the study of his elegant philosophy: his style is the purest standard of the Attic dialect; and his sublime thoughts are sometimes adapted to familiar conversation, and sometimes adorned with the richest colours of poetry and eloquence. The dialogues of Plato are a dramatic picture of the life and death of a sage; and as often as he descends from the clouds, his moral system inculcates the love of truth, of our country, and of mankind. The precept and example of Socrates recommended a modest doubt and liberal inquiry; and if the Platonists, with blind devotion, adored the visions and errors of their divine master, their enthusiasm might correct the dry dogmatic method of the Peripatetic school. So equal, yet so opposite, are the merits of Plato and Aristotle, that they may be balanced in endless controversy; but some spark of freedom may be produced by the collision of adverse servitude. The modern Greeks were divided between the two sects: with more fury than skill they fought under the banner of their leaders; and the field of battle was removed in their flight from Constantinople to Rome. But this philosophical debate soon degenerated into an * George Gemistus Placcho, a various and indigenuous writer, the master of Boetium, and all the Platonists of the times. He studied Italy in his old age, and soon returned to end his days in Peloponnesus. See the curious diatribe of Leo Allatius de Georgio, in Fabricius (Bibl. Græc. tom. x, p. 738-756).

CHAP.
LXVI.

angry and personal quarrel of grammarians; and Bessarion, though an advocate for Plato, protected the national honour, by interposing the advice and authority of a mediator. In the gardens of the Medici, the academical doctrine was enjoyed by the polite and learned: but their philosophic society was quickly dissolved; and if the writings of the Attic sage were perused in the closet, the more powerful Stagyrte continued to reign the oracle of the church and school.*

Emulation
and progress of the Latins.

I have fairly represented the literary merits of the Greeks; yet it must be confessed that they were seconded and surpassed by the ardour of the Latins. Italy was divided into many independent states; and at that time, it was the ambition of princes and republics to vie with each other in the encouragement and reward of literature.

Nicholas v.
a.d. 1447-
1455.

The fame of Nicholas the fifth† has not been adequate to his merits. From a plebeian origin, he raised himself by his virtue and learning; the character of the man prevailed over the interest of the pope; and he sharpened those weapons which were soon pointed against the Roman church.‡

* The state of the Platonic philosophy in Italy is illustrated by Bayle (Mém. de l'Acad. des Inscriptions, tom. ii, p. 713-729) and Tiraboschi (tom. vi, p. i, p. 230-238).

† See the life of Nicholas v. by two contemporary authors, James von Monem (tom. iii, p. ii, p. 903-907, and Vespasian of Florence (tom. i, p. 267-290), in the collection of Mommsen; and consult Tiraboschi (tom. vi, p. i, p. 16-17, 109) and Hady in the articles of Theodore Gazæ, George of Tschirnad, &c.

‡ Lord Bellinghame observes, with acuteness and spirit, that the popes, 'in this instance were worse politicians than the muses, and that the charm which has hitherto shackled us so many ages was broken by the magicians themselves' (Lectures on the Study of History, l. vi, p. 143, 166, second edition, 1779).

He had been the friend of the most eminent scholars of the age: he became their patron; and such was the humility of his manners, that the change was scarcely discernible either to them or to himself. If he pressed the acceptance of a liberal gift, it was not as the measure of desert, but as the proof of benevolence; and when modest merit declined his bounty, "accept it," would he say with a consciousness of his own worth; "you will not always have a Nicholas among ye." The influence of the holy see pervaded Christendom; and he exerted that influence in the search, not of benefices, but of books. From the ruins of the Byzantine libraries, from the darkest monasteries of Germany and Britain, he collected the dusty manuscripts of the writers of antiquity; and wherever the original could not be removed, a faithful copy was transcribed and transmitted for his use. The Vatican, the old repository for bulls and legends, for superstition and forgery, was daily replenished with more precious furniture: and such was the industry of Nicholas, that in a reign of eight years, he formed a library of five thousand volumes. To his munificence the Latin world was indebted for the versions of Xenophon, Diodorus, Polybius, Thucydides, Herodotus, and Appian; of Strabo's Geography, of the Iliad, of the most valuable works of Plato and Aristotle, of Ptolemy and Theophrastus, and of the fathers of the Greek church. The example of the Roman pontiff was preceded or imitated by a Florentine merchant, who governed the republic without arms and

CHAP.
LXVI.Cosimo and Lorenzo of Medici,
a. d. 1429-
1492.

CHAP.
LXVI.

without a title. Cosmo of Medicea* was a father of a line of princes, whose name and age are almost synonymous with the restoration of learning: his credit was ennobled into fame; his riches were dedicated to the service of mankind; he corresponded at once with Cairo and London; and a cargo of Indian spices and Greek books was often imported in the same vessel. The genius and education of his grandson Lorenzo rendered him not only a patron, but a judge and candidate, in the literary race. In his palace, distress was entitled to relief, and merit to reward: his leisure hours were delightfully spent in the Platonic academy: he encouraged the emulation of Demetrius Chalcocondyles and Angelo Politian; and his active missionary Janus Lascaris returned from the East with a treasure of two hundred manuscripts, fourscore of which were as yet unknown in the libraries of Europe.<sup>a</sup> The rest of Italy was animated by a similar spirit, and the progress of the nation repaid the liberality of her princes. The Latins held the exclusive property of their own literature; and these disciples of Greece were soon capable of transmitting and improving the lessons which they had imbibed. After a short succession of foreign teachers, the tide of emigration subsided; but the language of Constantinople was spread beyond the Alps; and the natives of France, Germany, and England,* imparted to their country the sacred fire which they had kindled in the schools of Florence and Rome.<sup>4</sup> In the productions of the mind, as in those of the soil, the gifts of nature are excelled by industry and skill: the Greek authors, forgotten on the banks of the Ilissus, have been illustrated on those of the Elbe and the Thames; and Bessarion or Gaza might have envied the superior science of the barbarians; the accuracy of Budæus, the taste of Erasmus, the copiousness of Stephens, the erudition of Sculiger, the discernment of Reiske, or of Bentley. On the side of the Latins, the discovery of printing was a casual advantage; but this useful art has been applied by Aldus, and his innumerable successors, to perpetuate and multiply

* See the literary history of Cosmo and Lorenzo of Medicea, in Tiraboschi (tom. vi, p. l. l. c. 2), who bestows a due measure of praise on Alphonsus of Arragon, King of Naples, John Sforza of Milan, Ferruccio, Urbino, &c. The republic of Venice has derived the least from the gratitude of scholars.

<sup>a</sup> Tiraboschi (tom. vi, p. i, p. 104), from the preface of Janus Lascaris to the Greek Anthology, printed at Florence 1494. Lascaris (says Aldus in his preface to the Greek Doctors, apud Huetum, p. 249) in Atho Thracia natus. Est Lascaris, . . . in Italiam repositus. Misert enim ipsum Laurentius illi Medicus in Græcæ ad inquirendos simul, et quantum emendat prælio bonus illos. It is remarkable enough that the remark was facilitated by such Bojzet it.

* The Greek language was introduced into the university of Oxford in the last years of the fifteenth century, by George, Lector, and Lecturer, who had attended at Florence under Demetrius Chalkandrolus. See Dr. Knight's curious life of Erasmus. Although a stout academical patriot, he is forced to acknowledge that Erasmus learned Greek at Oxford, and taught it at Cambridge.

<sup>4</sup> The Italian Romans were desirous of keeping a monopoly of Greek learning. When Aldus was about to publish the Greek scholiasts on Æschylus and Æuripides, they say they, cave hoc facias, ne barbari latine adjecti domum nostram, et puerorum in Italian convertant. (Dr. Knight, in his Life of Erasmus, p. 365, from Beza's History.)

CHAP.
LXVI.

the works of antiquity.* A single manuscript imported from Greece is revived in ten thousand copies; and each copy is fairer than the original. In this form Homer and Plato would peruse with more satisfaction their own writings; and their scholiasts must resign the prize to the labours of our western editors.

the and shown of ancient learning.

Before the revival of classic literature, the barbarians in Europe were immersed in ignorance; and their vulgar tongues were marked with the rudeness and poverty of their manners. The students of the more perfect idioms of Rome and Greece were introduced to a new world of light and science; to the society of the free and polished nations of antiquity; and to a familiar converse with those immortal men who spoke the sublime language of eloquence and reason. Such an intercourse must tend to refine the taste and to elevate the genius of the moderns; and yet, from the first experiments, it might appear that the study of the ancients had given fetters, rather than wings, to the human mind. However laudable, the spirit of imitation is of a servile cast; and the first disciples of the Greeks and Romans were a colony of strangers in the midst of their age and country. The minute and laborious diligence which explored the antiquities of remote times might have improved or adorned the present state of society; the critic and metaphysician were the slaves of Aristotle; the poets, historians, and orators, were proud to repeat the thoughts and words of the Augustan age; the works of nature were observed with the eyes of Pliny and Theophrastus; and some pagan votaries professed a secret devotion to the gods of Homer and Plato.<sup>1</sup> The Italians were oppressed by the strength and number of their ancient auxiliaries: the century after the deaths of Petrarch and Boccace was filled with a crowd of Latin imitators, who decently replace on our shelves; but in that era of learning, it will not be easy to discern a real discovery of science, a work of invention or eloquence, in the popular language of the country.<sup>2</sup> But as <sup>1</sup> I will select three singular examples of this classic enthusiasm. 1. At the school of Florence, Gerolamo Platto said, in familiar conversation, to Giorgio di Tridamiti, that in a short time troubled world unanimously transcribe the gospel and the canon for a religion similar to that of the gentiles (Lion Adriano, apud Fabricium, tom. 2, p. 751). 2. Paul II persecuted the Roman academy, which had been founded by Pomponius Letici; and the principal members were accused of heresy, impiety, and paganism (Tiraboschi, tom. 1, p. 1, p. 81, 82). 3. In the next century, some scholars and poets in France celebrated the success of Jodelle's tragedy of Cleopatra, by a festival of Bacchus, and, as it is said, by the sacrifice of a goat (Bayle, Dictionnaire, Jodelle, Pomponelle, tom. 10, p. 34-35). Yet the spirit of bigotry might often discern a serious impiety in the sportive play of fancy and learning.

* The press of Aldus Manutius, a Roman, was established at Venice about the year 1494; he printed above sixty considerable works of Greek literature, almost all for the first time: several containing different treatises and authors, and of several authors two, three, or four editions (Fabric. Biblioth. Græcæ, tom. xii, p. 603, &c.). Yet his glory must not tempt us to forget, that the first Greek book, the Grammar of Constantine Lascaris, was printed at Milan, in 1476; and that the Florence Homer of 1488 displays all the luxury of the typographical art. See the Annales Typographiques of Maittaire, and the Bibliographia Instructiva of de Bure, a knowing bookseller of Paris.

<sup>2</sup> The survivors of Boccace died in the year 1375; and we cannot place before 1480 the composition of the Morgante Maggior of Pulci, and the Orlando Innamorato of Boyardo (Tiraboschi, tom. 1, p. 11, p. 174-177).

CHAP.
LXVI.
*****

soon as it had been deeply saturated with the celestial dew, the soil was quickened into vegetation and life; the modern idioms were refined: the classics of Athens and Rome inspired a pure taste and a generous emulation; and in Italy, as afterwards in France and England, the pleasing reign of poetry and fiction was succeeded by the light of speculative and experimental philosophy. Genius may anticipate the season of maturity; but in the education of a people, as in that of an individual, memory must be exercised, before the powers of reason and fancy can be expanded; nor may the artist hope to equal or surpass, till he has learned to imitate, the works of his predecessors.

CHAP. LXVII.

Schism of the Greeks and Latins.—Reign and character of Anarath the second.—Cresale of Lodislaus, king of Hungary.—His defeat and death.—John Huniader.—Sanderbeg.—Constantine Paleologus, last emperor of the East.

THE respective merits of Rome and Constantinople are compared and celebrated by an eloquent Greek, the father of the Italian schools.* The view of the ancient capital, the seat of his ancestors, surpassed the most sanguine expectations of Eusebius Chrysoloras; and he no longer blamed the exclamation of an old sophist, that Rome was the habitation, not of men, but of gods. Those gods, and those men, had long since vanished; but, to the eye of liberal enthusiasm, the majesty of ruin restored the image of her ancient prosperity. Their ornaments of the consuls and Cæsars, of the martyrs and apostles, engaged on all sides the curiosity of the philosopher and the christian; and he confessed, that in every age the arms and the religion of Rome were destined to reign over the earth.

CHAP.
LXVII.

.....
Comparison of Rome and Constantinople.

* The Epistle of Eusebius Chrysoloras to the emperor John Paleologus will not offend the eye or ear of a classical student (see eadem Codex de Antiquariis &c. v. p. 107-126). The superscription suggests a chronological remark, that John Paleologus it was associated in the empire before the year 1414, the date of Chrysoloras's death. A still earlier date, at least 1408, is deduced from the age of his youngest sons, Demetrius and Thomas, who were both Porphyrogeniti (Ducange, Fam. Byzant. p. 241, 247).

CHAP.
LXVII.

While Chrysoloras admired the venerable beauties of the mother, he was not forgetful of his native country, her fairest daughter, her imperial colony; and the Byzantine patriot expatiates with zeal and truth on the eternal advantages of nature, and the more transitory glories of art and dominion, which adorned, or had adorned, the city of Constantine. Yet the perfection of the copy still redounds (as he modestly observes) to the honour of the original, and parents are delighted to be renewed, and even excelled, by the superior merit of their children. "Constantinople," says the orator, "is situate on a commanding point, between Europe and Asia, between the Archipelago and the Euxine. By her interposition, the two seas, and the two continents, are united for the common benefit of nations; and the gates of commerce may be shut or opened at her command. The harbour, encompassed on all sides by the sea and the continent, is the most secure and capacious in the world. The walls and gates of Constantinople may be compared with those of Babylon: the towers are many; each tower is a solid and lofty structure; and the second wall, the outer fortification, would be sufficient for the defence and dignity of an ordinary capital. A broad and rapid stream may be introduced into the ditches; and the artificial island may be encompassed like Athens* by land or water."

* Somewhat observed, that the city of Athens might be circumnavigated (see notes on the city of Athens in the original and original). But what may be true in a rhetorical sense of Constantinople,

Two strong and natural causes are alleged for the perfection of the model of New Rome. The royal founder reigned over the most illustrious nations of the globe; and in the accomplishment of his designs, the power of the Romans was combined with the art and science of the Greeks. Other cities have been reared to maturity by accident and time; their beauties are mingled with disorder and deformity; and the inhabitants, unwilling to move from their natal spot, are incapable of correcting the errors of their ancestors, and the original vices of situation or climate. But the free idea of Constantinople was formed and executed by a single mind; and the primitive model was improved by the obedient zeal of the subjects and successors of the first monarch. The adjacent isles were stored with an inexhaustible supply of marble; but the various materials were transported from the most remote shores of Europe and Asia; and the public and private buildings, and palaces, churches, aqueducts, cisterns, porticoes, columns, baths, and hippodromes, were adapted to the greatness of the capital of the East. The superfluity of wealth was spread along the shores of Europe and Asia; and the Byzantine territory, as far as the Euxine, the Hellespont, and the long wall, might be considered as a populous suburb and a perpetual garden. In this flattering picture, the past and the present, the times of prosperity and decay, are artfully con-cannot be applied to the situation of Athens, five miles from the sea, and not intersected or surrounded by any navigable stream.

CHAP.
LXVII.

founder; but a sigh and a confession escape from the orator, that his wretched country was the shadow and sepulchre of its former self. The works of ancient sculpture had been defaced by christian zeal or barbaric violence; the fairest structures were demolished; and the marbles of Paros or Numidia were burnt for lime, or applied to the meanest uses. Of many a statue, the place was marked by an empty pedestal; of many a column, the site was determined by a broken capital; the tombs of the emperors were scattered on the ground; the stroke of time was accelerated by storms and earthquakes; and the vacant space was adorned, by vulgar tradition, with fabulous monuments of gold and silver. From these wonders, which lived only in memory or belief, he distinguishes, however, the porphyry pillar, the column and colossus of Justinian,* and the church, more especially the dome, of St. Sophia; the best conclusion, since it could not be described according to its merits, and after it no other object could deserve to be mentioned. But he forgets, that a century before, the trembling fabrics of the colossus and the church had been saved and supported by the timely care of Andronicus the elder. Thirty years after the emperor had fortified St. Sophia with two new buttresses or pyramids, the eastern hemisphere suddenly gave way; and the langes, the altars, and the sanctuary, were crashed by the falling ruin. The mischief indeed was speedily repaired; the rubbish was cleared by the incessant labour of every rank and age; and the poor remains of riches and industry were consecrated by the Greeks to the most stately and venerable temple of the East.<sup>4</sup>

* Nicéphorus Gregoras has described the colossus of Justinian (i. vii. 12); but his accounts are false and inconsistent. The editor Belzoni corrected his friend Canonica; and the original gives him the true proportions of an equestrian statue. That of Justinian was still visible to Petrus Gyllius, not in the column, but in the outward part of the entablature; and he was at Constantinople when it was pulled down, and cast into a brass cannon (de Topographia, c. xi. l. ii. c. 17).

The last hope of the falling city and empire was placed in the harmony of the mother and daughter, in the maternal tenderness of Rome, and the filial obedience of Constantinople. In the synod of Florence, the Greeks and Latins had embraced, and subscribed, and promised; but these signs of friendship were perfidious or fruitless; and the baseless fabric of the union vanished like a dream.<sup>5</sup> The emperor and his prelates returned home in the Venetian galleys; but as they touched at the Moors and the isles of

CHAP.
LXVII.

The Greek version of the Council of Florence, A. D. 1440-1442.

<sup>4</sup> See the decay and repairs of St. Sophia, in Niphargus Gregorius (p. 10, 11, 1-22, 76). The building was propped by Andronicus in 1317; the eastern hemisphere fell in 1545. The Greeks, in their pompous churches, erected the beauty and holiness of the church, as really barren, the shade of angels, and of God himself, &c.

<sup>5</sup> The genuine and original narrative of Symeonius (p. 212-224) opens the volume from the first signs of the Greeks at Venice, to the general opposition at Constantinople of the clergy and people.

<sup>6</sup> On the edition of Constantinople, see Erasmus (A. D. c. 17), Laurentius Christianus (A. D. c. 15), and Ducas (c. 31); the last of whom writes with truth and freedom. Among the authors we may distinguish the continuator of Vossius (p. 101, p. 105, A. D. 401, 405, B. D. c. 1441, 204). The name of the latter is destined to prejudice and passion, as well as Rome and religion are concerned.

CHAP.
LXVII.

Corn and Lascas, the subjects of the Latins complained that the pretended union would be an instrument of oppression. No sooner did they land on the Byzantine shore, than they were saluted, or rather assailed, with a general murmur of zeal and discontent. During their absence, above two years, the capital had been deprived of its civil and ecclesiastical rulers: fanaticism fermented in anarchy; the most furious monks reigned over the conscience of women and bigots; and the hatred of the Latin name was the first principle of nature and religion. Before his departure for Italy, the emperor had flattered the city with the assurance of a prompt relief and a powerful encounter; and the clergy, confident in their orthodoxy and science, had promised themselves and their flocks an easy victory over the blind shepherds of the West. The double disappointment exasperated the Greeks; the conscience of the subscribing prelates was awakened; the hour of temptation was past; and they had more to dread from the public resentment, than they could hope from the favour of the emperor or the pope. Instead of justifying their conduct, they deplored their weakness, confessed their contrition, and cast themselves on the mercy of God and of their brethren. To the reproachful question, what had been the event or use of their Italian synod? they answered, with sighs and tears, "Alas! we have made a new faith; we have exchanged piety for impiety; we have betrayed the immaculate sacrifice; and we are become

" Azymites." (The Azymites were those who celebrated the communion with unleavened bread; and I must retract or qualify the praise which I have bestowed on the growing philosophy of the times). " Alas! we have been seduced by distress, by fraud, and by the hopes and fears of a transitory life. The hand that has signed the union should be cut off; and the tongue that has pronounced the Latin creed deserves to be torn from the root." The best proof of their repentance was an increase of zeal for the most trivial rites and the most incomprehensible doctrines; and an absolute separation from all, without excepting their prince, who preserved some regard for honour and consistency. After the decease of the patriarch Joseph, the archbishops of Heraclea and Trebizon had courage to refuse the vacant office; and cardinal Bessarion preferred the warm and comfortable shelter of the Vatican. The choice of the emperor and his clergy was confined to Metrophanes of Cyzicus; he was consecrated in St. Sophia, but the temple was vacant. The cross-bearers abdicated their service; the infection spread from the city to the villages; and Metrophanes discharged, without effect, some ecclesiastical thunders against a nation of schismatics. The eyes of the Greeks were directed to Mark of Ephesus, the champion of his country; and the sufferings of the holy confessor were repaid with a tribute of admiration and applause. His example and writings propagated the flame of religious discord; age and infirmity soon removed him from the world.

CHAP.
LXVII.Zeal of the Orientals and Russians.

but the gospel of Mark was not a law of forgiveness; and he requested with his dying breath, that none of the adherents of Rome might attend his obsequies, or pray for his soul.

The schism was not confined to the narrow limits of the Byzantine empire. Secure under the Mamaluke sceptre, the three patriarchs of Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem, assembled a numerous synod; disowned their representatives at Ferrara and Florence; condemned the creed and council of the Latins; and threatened the emperor of Constantinople with the censures of the Eastern church. Of the sectaries of the Greek communion, the Russians were the most powerful, ignorant, and superstitious. Their primate, the cardinal Isidore, hastened from Florence to Moscow,* to reduce the independent nation under the Roman yoke. But the Russian bishops had been educated at mount Athos; and the prince and people embraced the theology of their priests. They were scandalized by the title, the pomp, the Latin cross, of the legate, the friend of those impious men who shaved their beards, and performed the divine office with gloves on their hands, and rings on their fingers: Isidore was condemned by a synod; his person was imprisoned in a monastery; and it was with extreme difficulty * Isidore was metropolitan of Kiev: but the Greeks subjected to Poland have removed that see from the ruins of Kiev to Lemberg, or Leopold (Hartwich in Reumont, tom. ii. p. 127). On the other hand, the Russians transferred their spiritual allegiance to the archbishop, who became, in 1583, the patriarch of Moscow (Lamouignon, Hist. de Russie, part. iv. p. 198, 199, from a Greek manuscript at Turin, Acta et scripta Archiepiscopii Arundelii).

that the cardinal could escape from the hands of a fierce and fanatic people.<sup>a</sup> The Russians refused a passage to the missionaries of Rome who aspired to convert the pagans beyond the Tanais,<sup>b</sup> and their refusal was justified by the maxim, that the guilt of idolatry is less damnable than that of schism. The errors of the Bohemians were excused by their abhorrence for the pope; and a deputation of the Greek clergy solicited the friendship of those sanguinary enthusiasts.<sup>c</sup> While Eugenius triumphed in the union and orthodoxy of the Greeks, his party was contracted to the walls, or rather to the palace, of Constantinople. The zeal of Palæologus had been excited by interest; it was soon cooled by opposition: an attempt to violate the national belief might endanger his life and crown; nor could the pious rebels be destitute of foreign and do-

CHAP.
LXVII.

<sup>a</sup> The various narrative of Levesque (Hist. de Russie, tom. ii, p. 242-245) is extracted from the patriarchal archives. The scenes of Fire and Flames are described by ignorance and passion; but the Russians are credulous in the amount of their own prejudices.

<sup>b</sup> The animism, the occult religion of the Samoiens and Gyrogonians, has been derived by the same popular tradition, from India into the northern waters: the sacred phlogistons were supposed to wrap themselves in furs and they incessantly smoked tobacco and phlogistons. The Shamans and Tcheremisses, in the Laptevian Russia, adhere to this religion, which is formed on the ancient model of our king of Ugri, his numbers of wives, and his religious spirit who opposes his government. As these tribes of the Volga have no images, they might more justly resort to the Latin missionaries the name of Idolaters (Idolâtres, Hist. des Empires Russes) is Barbarians that des Russes, tom. i, p. 194-207, 423-460.

<sup>c</sup> Symonides, Agios. Fables, tom. ii, c. p. 1451, No. 12. The epistle of the Georgians, with a Latin version, is extant at the college Library at Perugia.

CHAP.
LXVII.

domestic aid. The sword of his brother Demetrius, who in Italy had maintained a prudent and popular science, was half unsheathed in the cause of religion; and Amurath, the Turkish sultan, was displeased and alarmed by the seeming friendship of the Greeks and Latins.

*Beiges and expedition of Amurath into vi.
no. 1491.
1451,
Fol. D.*

" Sultan Murad, or Amurath, lived forty-nine,
" and reigned thirty, years, six months, and eight " days. He was a just and valiant prince, of a " great soul, patient of labours, learned, merci" ful, religious, charitable; a lover and encour-
" ager of the studious, and of all who excelled
" in any art or science; a good emperor, and " a great general. No man obtained more, or " greater, victories than Amurath; Belgrade
" alone withstood his attacks. Under his reign,
" the soldier was ever victorious, the citizen rich
" and secure. If he subdued any country, his " first care was to build mosques and caravanseras,
" hospitals and colleges. Every year he gave a " thousand pieces of gold to the sons of the " prophet; and sent two thousand five hundred
" to the religious persons of Meera, Medina, and " Jerusalem." This portrait is transcribed from the historian of the Ottoman empire; but the applause of a servile and superstitious people has been lavished on the worst of tyrants, and the virtues of a sultan are, often the vices most useful to himself, or most agreeable to his sub-

See Constant, History of the Ottoman Empire, p. 94. Murad, or Masud, may be more correct, but I have preferred the popular name, to that obscure disfigure which is rarely successful in translating an Oriental into the Roman alphabet.

jects. A nation ignorant of the equal benefits of liberty and law, must be awed by the flashes of arbitrary power: the cruelty of a despot will assume the character of justice; his profusion, of liberality; his obstinacy, of firmness. If the most reasonable excuse be rejected, few acts of obedience will be found impossible; and guilt must tremble, where innocence cannot always be secure. The tranquillity of the people, and the discipline of the troops, were best maintained by perpetual action in the field: war was the trade of the janizaries; and those who survived the peril, and divided the spoil, applauded the generous ambition of their sovereign. To propagate the true religion, was the duty of a faithful musliman: the unbelievers were his enemies, and those of the prophet; and, in the hands of the Turks, the scymetar was the only instrument of conversion. Under these circumstances, however, the justice and moderation of Amurath are attested by his conduct, and acknowledged by the christians themselves; who consider a prosperous reign and a peaceful death as the reward of his singular merits. In the vigour of his age and military power, he seldom engaged in a war till he was justified by a previous and adequate provocation: the victorious sultan was disarmed by submission; and in the observance of treaties, his word was inviolate and sacred.<sup>m</sup> The Hungarians were commonly the aggressors: he was provoked by the revolt of Scanderbeg; and the perfidious Caramanian was twice vanquished, and twice pardoned, by the Ottoman monarch. Before he invaded the Morea, Thebes had been surprised by the despot: in the conquest of Thessalonica, the grandson of Bajazet might dispute the recent purchase of the Venetians; and after the first siege of Constantinople, the sultan was never tempted, by the distress, the absence, or the injuries of Palaeologus, to extinguish the dying light of the Byzantine empire.

<sup>m</sup> See Chalcovtylus (l. vii. p. 186, 195), Ducas (p. 28), and Marcion Raynæus (in VII. Scanderberg, p. 146, 149). In his good faith towards the garrison of Szigraed, he was a lesson and example to his son Mahomet.

CHAP.
LXTH.

His double abdication,
i. e. 1342-
1344.

But the most striking feature in the life and character of Amurath is the double abdication of the Turkish throne; and, were not his motives debased by an alloy of superstition, we must praise the royal philosopher,* who, at the age of forty, could discern the vanity of human greatness. Resigning the sceptre to his son, he retired to the pleasant residence of Magonia; but he retired to the society of saints and hermits. It was not till the fourth century of the Hegira, that the religion of Mahomet had been corrupted by an institution so adverse to his genius; but in the age of the crusades, the various orders of dervishes were multiplied by the example of the christian, and even the Latin, monks.† The lord of nations submitted to fast, and pray, and turn round in * Voltaire (Essai sur l'Histoire Générale, v. 29, p. 223, 294) ad- mires le philosophe Turc; would he have bestowed the same praise on a christian priest retreating to a monastery? In his way, Voltaire was a bigot, an intolérant bigot.

† See the Notes sur les Derviches, Fakihs, Semaïs, &c., in d'Hérault's Encyclopédie Orientale. Yet the subject is superficially treated from the Persian and Arabian writers. It is among the Turks that these orders have principally flourished.

endless rotation with the fanatics, who mistook the giddiness of the head for the illumination of the spirit.* But he was soon awakened from this dream of enthusiasm, by the Hungarian invasion; and his obedient son was the foremost to urge the public danger and wishes of the people. Under the banner of their veteran leader, the janizaries fought and conquered; but he withdrew from the field of Varoa, again to pray, to fast, and to turn round to his Magnesian brethren. These pious occupations were again interrupted by the danger of the state. A victorious army despised the inexperience of their youthful ruler: the city of Adrianople was abandoned to rapine and slaughter; and the unanimous divan implored his presence to appease the tumult, and prevent the rebellion, of the janizaries. At the well-known voice of their master, they trembled and obeyed; and the reluctant sultan was compelled to support his splendid servitude, till, at the end of four years, he was relieved by the angel of death. Age or disease, misfortune or caprice, have tempted several princes to descend from the throne; and they have had leisure to repent of their irretrievable step. But Amurath alone, in the full liberty of choice, after the trial of empire and solitude, has repeated his preference of a private life.

* Recent (on the present State of the Ottoman Empire, p. 277-282) affords much information, which he draws from his personal conversation with the heads of the dervishes, most of whom derived their origin to the time of Orchan. He does not mention the Khalka of Chamaelytes (i. vii, p. 286), among whom Amurath retained the Saids of that order as the descendants of Mahomet.

CHAP.
LXVII.

Eugenius
forms a league against the Turks,
a. d. 1443.

After the departure of his Greek brethren, Eugenius had not been unmindful of their temporal interest; and his tender regard for the Byzantine empire was animated by a just apprehension of the Turks, who approached, and might soon invade, the borders of Italy. But the spirit of the crusades had expired; and the coldness of the Franks was not less unreasonable than their headlong passion. In the eleventh century, a fanatic monk could precipitate Europe on Asia for the recovery of the holy sepulchre; but in the fifteenth, the most pressing motives of religion and policy were insufficient to unite the Latins in the defence of Christendom. Germany was an inexhaustible store-house of men and arms;* but that complex and languid body required the impulse of a vigorous hand; and Frederic the third was alike impotent in his personal character and his imperial dignity. A long war had impaired the strength, without satiating the animosity, of France and England:† but Philip, duke of Burgundy, was a vain and magnificent prince; and he enjoyed,

* In the year 1471, Germany raised 40,000 horse, soon at arms, against the Hussites of Bohemia (Hist. du Concile de Bâle, tom. 4, p. 319). At the siege of Nagy on the Rhine, in 1474, the papists, jesuits, and others, sent their respective quotas; and the bishop of Munster qui n'est pas des plus grands furnished 1400 horse, 6000 foot, all in green, with 1200 waggons. The united armies of the king of England and the duke of Burgundy scarcely equalled one third of this German host (Mémoires de Philippe de Comines, l. 6, c. 2). At present, six or seven hundred thousand men are enlisted in constant pay and obsequious discipline, by the powers of Germany.

† It was not till the year 1444, that France and England could agree on a truce of some months. (See Rymer's Fœdera, and the Chronicles of both nations.)

without danger or expence, the adventurous piety of his subjects, who sailed, in a gallant fleet, from the coast of Flanders to the Hellespont. The maritime republics of Venice and Genoa were less remote from the scene of action; and their hostile fleets were associated under the standard of St. Peter. The kingdoms of Hungary and Poland, which covered as it were the interior pale of the Latin church, were the most nearly concerned to oppose the progress of the Turks. Arms were the patrimony of the Scythians and Sarmatians, and these nations might appear equal to the contest, could they point against the common foe those swords that were so wantonly drawn in bloody and domestic quarrels. But the same spirit was adverse to concord and obedience: a poor country and a limited monarch are incapable of maintaining a standing force; and the loose bodies of Polish and Hungarian horse were not armed with the sentiments and weapons which, on some occasions, have given irresistible weight to the French chivalry. Yet, on this side, the designs of the Roman pontiff, and the eloquence of cardinal Julian, his legate, were promoted by the circumstances of the times;* by the union of the two crowns on the head of Ladislaus,† a young

* In the Hungarian expeditions, Spaulding (Annals, Berlin, v. c. 1442, 1443) has been my leading guide. He has diligently read, and critically compared, the Greek and Turkish materials, the histories of Hungary, Poland, and the West. His narrative is judicious; and where he can be free from a religious bias, the judgment of Spaulding is not unexceptionable.

† I have corrected the harsh letter (Wladislaus) which most writers give to his name, either in compliance with the Polish pronunciation, and ambitious soldier: by the valour of an hero, whose name, the name of John Humiades, was already popular among the christians, and formidable to the Turks. An endless treasure of pardons and indulgences was scattered by the legate; many private warriors of France and Germany enlisted under the holy banner; and the crusade derived some strength, or at least some reputation, from the new allies both of Europe and Asia. A fugitive despot of Servia exaggerated the distress and ardour of the christians beyond the Danube, who would unanimously rise to vindicate their religion and liberty. The Greek emperor,* with a spirit unknown to his fathers, engaged to guard the Bosphorus, and to rally from Constantinople at the head of his national and mercenary troops. The sultan of Caramania<sup>2</sup> announced the retreat of Amurath, and a powerful diversion in the heart of Anatolia; and if the fleets of the West could occupy at the same moment the straits of the Hellespont, the Ottoman monarchy would be discovered and destroyed. Heaven and earth must rejoice in the perdition of the miscreants; and or to distinguish him from his rival, the infant Ladislaus of Austria. Their competition for the crown of Hungary is described by Calimachus (l. iii. p. 447-448), Bontinus (Decad. iii. l. 37), Spandanus, and Lefelius.

CHAP.
LXVII.

* The Greek historians, Phragma, Chalcandyles, and Ducas, do not ascribe to their prince a very active part in this crusade, which he seems to have promoted by his wishes, and injured by his fears.

<sup>2</sup> Constantine (p. 58) ascribes to his policy the original plan, and transcribes his animating epistle to the king of Hungary. But the mahometan powers are seldom informed of the state of Christendom; and the situation and correspondence of the knights of Rhodes must connect them with the sultan of Caramania.

the legate, with prudent ambiguity, instilled the opinion of the invisible, perhaps the visible, aid of the Son of God, and his divine mother.

CHAP.
LXVII.

Of the Polish and Hungarian diets, a religious war was the unanimous cry; and Ladislaus, after passing the Danube, led an army of his confederate subjects as far as Sophia, the capital of the Bulgarian kingdom. In this expedition they obtained two signal victories, which were justly ascribed to the valour and conduct of Huniades. In the first, with a vanguard of ten thousand men, he surprised the Turkish camp; in the second, he vanquished and made prisoner the most renowned of their generals, who possessed the double advantage of ground and numbers. The approach of winter, and the natural and artificial obstacles of mount Hæmus, arrested the progress of the hero, who measured a narrow interval of six days' march from the foot of the mountains to the hostile towers of Adrianople, and the friendly capital of the Greek empire. The retreat was undisturbed; and the entrance into Buda was at once a military and religious triumph. An ecclesiastical procession was followed by the king and his warriors on foot: he nicely balanced the merits and rewards of the two nations; and the pride of conquest was blended with the humble temper of christianity. Thirteen bashaws, nine standards, and four thousand captives, were unquestionable trophies; and as all were willing to believe, and none were present to contradict, the crusaders multiplied, with unblinking confidence, the myriads of Turks whom they had left on the field of

Ladislaus,
king of Poland and Hungary. marches against them.

CHAP.
LXVII.The Turkish peace.

battle.* The most solid proof, and the most salutary consequence, of victory was a deputation from the divan to solicit peace, to restore Servia, to ransom the prisoners, and to evacuate the Hungarian frontier. By this treaty, the rational objects of the war were obtained: the king, the despot, and Huniades himself, in the diet of Segedin, were satisfied with public and private emolument; a truce of ten years was concluded; and the followers of Jesus and Mahomet, who swore on the gospel and the koran, attested the word of God as the guardian of truth and the avenger of perfidy. In the place of the gospel, the Turkish ministers had proposed to substitute the eucharist, the real presence of the catholic deity; but the christians refused to profane their holy mysteries; and a superstitious conscience is less forcibly bound by the spiritual energy, than by the outward and visible symbols, of an oath."

Continuation
of the peace,
A. D. 1444.

During the whole transaction, the cardinal legate had observed a sullen silence, unwilling to approve, and unable to oppose, the consent of the king and people. But the diet was not dissolved before Julian was fortified by the welcome intelligence, that Anatolia was invaded by the Caramanian, and Thrace by the Greek emperor; that

* In their letters to the emperor Frederic III, the Hungarians say 100,000 Turks in one battle; but the apostolic Julian reduces the slaughter to 6000, or even 2000, infants (Æneas Sylvius in Europ. 4, 5, and epist. 44, 81, apud Spelmanum).

* See the origin of the Turkish war, and the first expedition of Lis Salomon, in the fifth and sixth books of the third Decad of Bonifolius, who, in his division and style, copies Livy with tolerable success. Callimachus (J. II, p. 487-496) is still more pure and archaistic.

the fleets of Genoa, Venice, and Burgundy, were masters of the Hellespont; and that the allies, informed of the victory, and ignorant of the treaty, of Ladislaus, impatiently waited for the return of his victorious army. "And is it thus," exclaimed the cardinal, "that you will desert their expectations and your own fortune? It is to them, to your God, and your fellow-christians, that you have pledged your faith; and that prior obligation annihilates a rash and sacrilegious oath to the enemies of Christ. His vicar on earth is the Roman pontiff, without whose sanction you can neither promise nor perform. In his name, I absolve your perjury and sanctify your arms: follow my footsteps in the paths of glory and salvation; and if still ye have scruples, devalve on my head the punishment and the sin." This mischievous casuistry was seconded by his respectable character, and the levity of popular assemblies; war was resolved on the same spot where peace had so lately been sworn: and, in the execution of the treaty, the Turks were assailed by the christians, to whom, with some reason, they might apply the epithet of infidels. The falsehood of Ladislaus to his word and oath was palliated by the religion of the times: the most perfect, or at least the most popular, excuse would have been the success of his arms and the deliverance of the Eastern church. But the same treaty which should have bound his conscience, had diminished his strength. On the proclamation of the peace, the French and German volunteers departed with indignant murmurs: the Poles were exhausted by distant warfare, and perhaps disgusted with foreign commands; and their palatines accepted the first licence, and hastily retired to their provinces and castles. Even Hungary was divided by faction, or restrained by a laudable scruple; and the relics of the crusade that marched in the second expedition were reduced to an inadequate force of twenty thousand men. A Wallachian chief, who joined the royal standard with his vassals, presumed to remark that their numbers did not exceed the hunting retinue that sometimes attended the sultan; and the gift of two horses of matchless speed might admonish Ladislaus of his secret foresight of the event. But the despot of Servia, after the restoration of his country and children, was tempted by the promise of new realms; and the inexperience of the king, the enthusiasm of the legate, and the martial presumption of Huniades himself, were persuaded that every obstacle must yield to the invincible virtue of the sword and the cross. After the passage of the Danube, two roads might lead to Constantinople and the Hellespont; the one direct, abrupt, and difficult, through the mountains of Haemus; the other, more tedious and secure, over a level country, and along the shores of the Euxine, in which their flanks, according to the Scythian discipline, might always be covered by a moveable fortification of waggons. The latter was judiciously preferred; the catholics marched through the plains of Bulgaria, burning, with wanton cruelty, the churches and villages of the christian natives; and their last station was at Warnæ, near the sea-shore; on which the defeat and death of Ladislaus have bestowed a memorable name.*

* I do not pretend to warrant the literal accuracy of Julian's speech, which is certainly wanted by Castricius (l. iii. p. 304, 207), Boninus (Dec. iii. l. v. p. 451, 452), and other historians, who might indulge their own eloquence, while they represent one of the ornaments of the age. But they all agree in the advice and arguments for property, which in the field of controversy are warmly attacked by the protestants, and hotly defended by the catholics. The latter are discouraged by the misfortune of Wagram.

CHAP.
LXVII.

CHAP.
LXVII.

It was on this fatal spot, that, instead of finding a confederate fleet to second their operations, they were alarmed by the approach of Amurath himself, who had issued from his Mag-nesian solitude, and transported the forces of Asia to the defence of Europe. According to some writers, the Greek emperor had been swayed, or seduced, to grant the passage of the Bosphorus, and an indelible stain of corruption is fixed on the Genoese, or the pope's nephew, the catholic admiral, whose mercenary connivance betrayed the guard of the Hellespont.
From Adrianople, the sultan advanced by hasty marches, at the head of sixty thousand men; and when the cardinal, and Flaminio, had taken a nearer survey of the numbers and order of the Turks, these ardent warriors proposed the tardy and impracticable measure of a retreat. The Battle of Warnæ,

A. D. 1444,
Nov. 10.

* Warnæ, under the Grecian name of Odinissa, was a colony of the Moldavians, which they dispossessed from the town Byzantia (see Strabo, lib. 1, p. 511, & Anstet, lib. 1, p. 512). According to Armen's description of the Russians (p. 34, 25, in the first volume of Hindley's Geographical), it was distant 1740 stadia, or furlongs, from the mouth of the Danube, 2140 from Byzantium, and 260 to the north of a ridge or promontory of Mount Haemus, which advances into the sea.

CHAP.
LXVII.

king alone was resolved to conquer or die; and his resolution had almost been crowned with a glorious and salutary victory. The princes were opposite to each other in the centre; and the beglerbegs, or generals of Anatolia and Rumania, commanded on the right and left against the adverse divisions of the despot and Huniades. The Turkish wings were broken on the first onset, but the advantage was fatal; and the rash victors, in the heat of the pursuit, were carried away far from the annoyance of the enemy, or the support of their friends. When Amurath beheld the flight of his squadrons, he despaired of his fortune and that of the empire: a veteran janizary seized his horse's bridle; and he had magnanimity to pardon and reward the soldier who dared to perceive the terror, and arrest the flight, of his sovereign. A copy of the treaty, the monument of christian perfidy, had been displayed in the front of battle; and it is said, that the sultan in his distress, lifting his eyes and his hands to heaven, implored the protection of the God of truth; and called on the prophet Jesus himself to avenge the impious mockery of his name and religion.* With inferior numbers and disordered ranks, the king of Hungary rushed forwards in the confidence of victory, till his career was stopped by the impenetrable phalanx of the janizaries. If we may credit the Ottoman

* Some christian writers affirm, that he drew from his bosom the cross or wafer on which the treaty had not been sworn. The Moslems suppose, with more simplicity, an appeal to God and his prophet Jesus, which is likewise indicated by Callimachus l. iii. p. 315. Spalden: v. p. 1444, No. 8.

annals, his horse was pierced by the javelin of Amurath;<sup>a</sup> he fell among the spears of the infantry: and a Turkish soldier proclaimed with a loud voice, "Hungarians, behold the head of your king!" The death of Ladislaus was the signal of their defeat. On his return from an intemperate pursuit, Huniades deplored his error and the public loss: he strove to rescue the royal body, till he was overwhelmed by the tumultuous crowd of the victors and vanquished; and the last efforts of his courage and conduct were exerted to save the remnant of his Wallachian cavalry. Ten thousand christians were slain in the disastrous battle of Wara: the loss of the Turks, more considerable in numbers, bore a smaller proportion to their total strength; yet the philosophic sultan was not ashamed to confess, that his ruin must be the consequence of a second and similar victory. At his command a column was erected on the spot where Ladislaus had fallen; but the modest inscription, instead of accusing the rashness, recorded the valour, and bewailed the misfortune, of the Hungarian youth.<sup>b</sup>

CHAP.
LXVII.
.....
Death of Ladislaus.

<sup>a</sup> A critic will always distrust those spots upon a victorious general, so difficult his virtue to obtain, so easy his fallacy to detect (Cassius, p. 89, 91). Callimachus (l. ii. p. 517) more simply and probably affirms, experientibus fatalis, ubi sunt multitudines, non tam confusus est, quam solutus.

<sup>b</sup> Besides many valuable hints from Arabic Syriac, which are diligently collected by Spelman, the best authorities are three historians of the fifteenth century. Philippus Callimachus (de Rebus a Vladislao Polacorum, acque Hungarorum Regibus, lib. iii. in Bel. Script. Hungaricarum, tom. i. p. 413-416). Bonifacius (ibid. ii. l. v. p. 465-467), and Chalcomastylus (l. vii. p. 165-179). The two last were Italians, but they passed their lives in Poland and Hungary (Fœnis, Diction. Latin. mod. et lussus. Etalib. tom. i.

CHAP.
LXVII.The emperor Julian.

Before I lose sight of the field of Wara, I am tempted to pause on the character and story of two principal actors, the cardinal Julian and John Humiades. Julian<sup>1</sup> Casarini was born of a noble family of Rome; his studies had embraced both the Latin and Greek learning, both the sciences of divinity and law; and his versatile genius was equally adapted to the schools, the camp, and the court. No sooner had he been invested with the Roman purple, than he was sent into Germany to arm the empire against the rebels and heretics of Bohemia. The spirit of persecution is unworthy of a christian; the military profession ill becomes a priest; but the former is excused by the times; and the latter was ennobled by the courage of Julian, who stood dauntless and alone in the disgraceful flight of the German host. As the pope's legate, he opened the council of Basil; but the president soon appeared the most strenuous champion of ecclesiastical freedom; and an opposition of seven years was conducted by his ability and zeal. After promoting the strongest measures against the authority and person of Eugenius, some secret motive of interest or conscience engaged him to desert on a sudden the popular party.

p. 334. Voyage de Hist. Lottin l. iii. c. 8, 11. Barle, Dictionnaire, Supplément. A small tract of Felix Pascaene, chancellor of Seguis (ed. scriptum Comptum de Comptum, p. 714-722), represents the theatre of the war in the fifteenth century.

<sup>1</sup> M. Leclerc has discovered the origin (Hist. du Concile de Bâle, tom. I, p. 147, 248), and Bohemian campaigns (p. 118, 248), of cardinal Julian. His services at Basil and Fezara, and his unfortunate end, are veridically related by Spondanus, and the continuator of Flcury.

The cardinal withdrew himself from Basil to Ferrara; and, in the debates of the Greeks and Latins, the two nations admired the dexterity of his arguments and the depth of his theological erudition.* In his Hungarian embassy we have already seen the mischievous effects of his sophistry and eloquence, of which Julian himself was the first victim. The cardinal, who performed the duties of a priest and a soldier, was lost in the defeat of Wara. The circumstances of his death are variously related; but it is believed, that a weighty incumbrance of gold impeded his flight, and tempted the cruel avarice of some christian fugitives.

From an humble, or at least a doubtful, origin, John Cor-Constantin Huniades
 ninades promoted him to the command of the Hungarian armies. His father was a Wallachian, his mother a Greek; her unknown race might possibly ascend to the emperors of Constantinople; and the claims of the Wallachians, with the surname of Corcunus, from the place of his nativity, might suggest a thin pretence for mingling his blood with the patricians of ancient Rome.† In his youth he served in the wars of Italy, and was retained, with twelve horsemen, by the bishop of Zagrab: the valour of

* Synopulus honourably praises the labours of an embassy (p. 117): κατασκευασμένης τῆς ἐκείνου ἀντιπροσέλευσης ὡς οὐκ ὀλίγου, καὶ αὐτὸν ἀντιπροσέλευσας ὡς ἑκατόν τε ἄνθρωποι.

† See Huniades, deces iii, l. 19, p. 423. Could the famous Huniades pretend, as the king of Hungary here, without a shadow of account farther, not to acknowledge the name of a Wallachian village with the equally thoughtless epithet of a single branch of the Yulchian family of Rome?

CHAP.
LXVII.
.....

the white knight was soon conspicuous; he increased his fortunes by a noble and wealthy marriage; and in the defence of the Hungarian borders, he won in the same year three battles against the Turks. By his influence, Ladislaus of Poland obtained the crown of Hungary; and the important service was rewarded by the title and office of voivod of Transylvania. The first of Julian's crusades added two Turkish laurels on his brow; and in the public distress the fatal errors of Warna were forgotten. During the absence and minority of Ladislaus of Austria, the titular king, Huniades was elected supreme captain and governor of Hungary; and if envy at first was silenced by terror, a reign of twelve years supposes the arts of policy as well as of war. Yet the idea of a consummate general is not delineated in his campaigns: the white knight fought with the hand rather than the head, as the chief of desultory barbarians, who attack without fear, and fly without shame; and his military life is composed of a romantic alternative of victories and escapes. By the Turks, who employed his name to frighten their perverse children, he was corruptly denominated Jaxcus Lais, or the wicked: their hatred is the proof of their esteem; the kingdom which he guarded was inaccessible to their arms; and they felt him most daring and formidable, when they fondly believed the captain of his country

<sup>1</sup> Philip de Comines (Memoires, l. vi, c. 13), from the tradition of the times, mentions him with high encomiums, but under the whimsical name of the Chevalier Blanc de Valaigne (Valachia). The Grecs Chalcidenses, and the Turkish Annals of Lemniscus, presume to ascribe his fidelity or valour.

irrecoverably lost. Instead of confining himself to a defensive war, four years after the defeat of CHAP.
LXVII
~~~~~Warna he again penetrated into the heart of Bulgaria; and in the plain of Cossova sustained, till the third day, the shock of the Ottoman army, four times more numerous than his own. As he fled alone through the woods of Wallachia, the hero was surprised by two robbers; but while they disputed a gold chain that hung at his neck, he recovered his sword, slew the one, terrified the other, and, after new perils of captivity or death, consoled by his presence an afflicted kingdom. But the last and most glorious action of his life was the defence of Belgrade against the powers of Mahomet the second in person. After a siege of forty days, the Turks, who had already entered the town, were compelled to retreat; and the joyful nations celebrated Huniades and Belgrade as the bulwarks of Christendom.<sup>a</sup> About a month after this great deliverance, the champion expired; and his most splendid epitaph is the regret of the Ottoman prince, who sighed that he could no longer hope for revenge against the single antagonist who had triumphed over his arms. On the first vacancy of the throne, Matthias Corvinus, a youth of eighteen years of age, was elected and crowned by the grateful Hungarians. His reign was prosperous and long: Matthias aspired to the glory of a conqueror and

*The defence of Belgrade, and death,
a. d. 1456,
July 22,
Sept. 4.*

<sup>a</sup> See Boninus (lib. iii, l. viii, p. 492) and Spondanus (a. n. 1456, No. 1-7). Huniades shared the glory of the defence of Belgrade with Capistran, a Franciscan friar; and in their respective eulogiums, neither the saint nor the hero condescended to take notice of his friend's merit.

CHAP.
LXXVII.

a saint; but his purest merit is the encouragement of learning; and the Latin orators and historians, who were invited from Italy by the son, have shed the lustre of their eloquence on the father's character.<sup>1</sup>

Birth and education of Scander-beg, prince of Albania,
i. p. 1404-
1413, &c.

In the lists of heroes, John Huniades and Scanderbeg are commonly associated;<sup>2</sup> and they are both entitled to our notice, since their occupation of the Ottoman arms delayed the ruin of the Greek empire. John Castriot, the father of Scanderbeg,<sup>3</sup> was the hereditary prince of a small district of Epirus or Albania, between the mountains and the Adriatic sea. Unable to contend with the sultan's power, Castriot submitted to the hard conditions of peace and tribute: he delivered his four sons as the pledges of his fidelity; and the christian youths, after receiving the mark of circumcision, were instructed in the mahometan religion, and trained in the arms and arts of Turkish policy.* The three elder brothers were confounded in the crowd of slaves; and the prison to which their deaths are ascribed cannot be verified or disproved by any positive evidence. Yet the suspicion is in a great measure removed by the kind and paternal treatment of George Castriot, the fourth brother, who, from his tender youth, displayed the strength and spirit of a soldier. The successive overthrow of a Tartar and two Persians, who carried a proud defiance to the Turkish court, recommended him to the favour of Amurat; and his Turkish appellation of Scanderbeg (Iskender beg), or the lord Alexander, is an indelible memorial of his glory and servitude. His father's principality was reduced into a province: but the loss was compensated by the rank and title of sanjak, a command of five thousand horse, and the prospect of the first dignities of the empire. He served with honour in the wars of Europe and Asia; and we may smile at the art or credulity of the historian, who supposes that in every encounter he spared the christians, while he fell with a thundering arm on his musaulman foes. The glory of Huniades is without reproach; he fought in the defence of his religion and country; but the enemies who applaud the patriot have branded his rival with the name of * His circumcision, education, &c. are marked by Marins with brevity and elegance (l. 1, p. 9, 17).

<sup>1</sup> See Buzbalus, doct. II, l. xiv.—doct. IV, l. xiii. The observations of Spauldham on the life and character of Matthias Corvins are elegant and critical (i. p. 1404, No. 1, 1312, No. 8, 1373, No. 14-16, 1492, &c. &c.). Italian facts were the object of his study. His actions are celebrated in the Epitoma Historie Hungaricorum (p. 322-44) of Peter Bannanus, a Silesian. His wars and domestic sayings are registered by Galatius Marston of Nepes (1558-568); and we have a particular narrative of his wedding and coronation. These three works are all contained in the first vol. of Bell's Scriptores Historie Hungaricorum.

<sup>2</sup> They are ranked by Sir William Temple, in his pleasing Essay on Heroic Virtue (Works, vol. III, p. 283), among the seven chiefs who have deserved, without wearing, a royal crown: Belisarius, Narson, Rodericus of Castile, William first prince of Orange, Alexander duke of Parma, John Huniades, and George Castriot, or Scanderbeg.

<sup>3</sup> I would wish for some simple authentic memoir of a hero of Scanderbeg, which would introduce us to the man, the time, and the place. In the old and national history of Mathias Balthus, a priest of Bouda, the birth, marriage, or rather death, of George Castriot, Acc. lib. xiii, p. 337. Argemont. J. 1517, in folio, his garb and circumstances are stated with many false jewels. See likewise Chabreyrolus, l. vii, p. 153, l. xiii, p. 228.

CHAP.
LXVII.

traitor and apostate. In the eyes of the christians, the rebellion of Scanderbeg is justified by his father's wrongs, the ambiguous death of his three brothers, his own degradation, and the slavery of his country; and they adore the generous, though tardy, zeal, with which he asserted the faith and independence of his ancestors. But he had imbibed from his ninth year the doctrines of the koran; he was ignorant of the gospel; the religion of a soldier is determined by authority and habit; nor is it easy to conceive what new illumination, at the age of forty,* could be poured into his soul. His motives would be less exposed to the suspicion of interest or revenge, had he broken his chain from the moment that he was sensible of its weight; but a long oblivion had surely impaired his original right; and every year of obedience and reward had cemented the mutual bond of the sultan and his subject. If Scanderbeg had long harboured the belief of christianity and the intention of revolt, a worthy mind must condemn the base dissimulation, that could serve only to betray, that could promise only to be forsworn, that could actively join in the temporal and spiritual perdition of so many thousands of his unhappy brethren. Shall we praise a secret correspondence with Huniades, while he commanded the vanguard of the Turkish army? shall we excuse the desertion of his standard; a treacherous desertion, which abandoned the victory to the enemies of his benefactor? In the confusion of a defeat, the eye of Scanderbeg was fixed on the reis-essendi or principal secretary; with a dagger at his breast, he extorted a firman or patent for the government of Albania; and the murder of the guiltless scribe and his train prevented the consequences of an immediate discovery. With some bold companions, to whom he had revealed his design, he escaped in the night, by rapid marches, from the field of battle to his paternal mountains. The gates of Croyn were opened to the royal mandate: and no sooner did he command the fortress, than George Castriot dropt the mask of dissimulation; abjured the prophet and the sultan, and proclaimed himself the avenger of his family and country. The names of religion and liberty provoked a general revolt: the Albanians, a martial race, were unanimous to live and die with their hereditary prince; and the Ottoman garrisons were indulged in the choice of martyrdom or baptism. In the assembly of the states of Epirus, Scanderbeg was elected general of the Turkish war; and each of the allies engaged to furnish his respective proportion of men and money. From these contributions, from his patrimonial estate, and from the valuable salt-pits of Selina, he drew an annual revenue of two hundred thousand ducats;<sup>a</sup> and the entire sum,

* Since Scanderbeg died A. D. 1468, in the 63d year of his age (Maurinus, t. 5th, p. 370), he was born in 1405: since he was torn from his parents by the Turks, when he was seven (Maurinus, t. 1, p. 1, 6), that event must have happened in 1412, some years before the accession of Amurat II, who must have inherited, not acquired, the Albanian slave. Spandanus has remarked this inconsistency, p. 2, 1411, No. 31, 1413, No. 14.

CHAP.
LXVII.

His route from the Turks,
a. d. 1443.
Nov. 29.

<sup>a</sup> His revenue and taxes are luckily given by Maritius (l. ii. p. 144).

CHAP.
LXVII.

His valour,

exempt from the demands of luxury, was strictly appropriated to the public use. His manners were popular; but his discipline was severe: and every superfluous vice was banished from his camp: his example strengthened his command; and under his conduct, the Albanians were invincible in their own opinion and that of their enemies. The bravest adventurers of France and Germany were allured by his fame and retained in his service; his standing militia consisted of eight thousand horse and seven thousand foot; the horses were small, the men were active: but he viewed with a discerning eye the difficulties and resources of the mountains; and, at the blaze of the beacons, the whole nation was distributed in the strongest posts. With such unequal arms, Scanderbeg resisted twenty-three years the powers of the Ottoman empire; and two conquerors, Amurath the second, and his greater son, were repeatedly baffled by a rebel, whom they pursued with seeming contempt and implacable resentment. At the head of sixty thousand horse and forty thousand janizaries, Amurath entered Albania: he might ravage the open country, occupy the defenceless towns, convert the churches into mosques, circumcise the christian youths, and punish with death his adult and obetinate captives; but the conquests of the sultan were confined to the petty fortress of Scutigrade; and the garrison, invincible to his arms, was oppressed by a paltry artifice and a superstitious scruple.*

* There were two Dileas, the upper and lower, the Bulgarian and Albanian: the former, 10 miles from Croja (G. I. p. 17), was residi-

Amurath retired with shame and loss from the walls of Croja, the castle and residence of the Castriots: the march, the siege, the retreat, were harassed by a vexatious, and almost invisible, adversary; and the disappointment might tend to embitter, perhaps to shorten, the last days of the sultan.* In the fulness of conquest, Mahomet the second still felt at his bosom this domestic thorn: his lieutenants were permitted to negotiate a truce; and the Albanian prince may justly be praised as a firm and able champion of his national independence. The enthusiasm of chivalry and religion has ranked him with the names of Alexander and Pyrrhus: nor would they blush to acknowledge their intrepid countryman: but his narrow dominion, and slender powers, must leave him at an humble distance below the heroes of antiquity, who triumphed over the East and the Roman legions. His splendid achievements, the bushaws whom he encountered, the armies that he discomfited, and the three thousand Turks who were slain by his single hand, must be weighed in the scales of suspicious criticism. Against an illiterate enemy, and in the dark solitude of known to the fortress of Stetigade, where inhabitants refused to drink from a well into which a dead dog had treacherously been cast (l. v. p. 139, 140). We want a good map of Epirus.

* Compare the Turkish narrative of Constant (p. 92) with the pompous and profix declaration in the fourth, fifth, and sixth books of the Almanach priest, who has been seized by the wife of Atangate and murdered.

† In Annals of his hero, Barbarus (l. vi. p. 198-199) kills the sultan, by disease induced, under the walls of Croja. But this audacious fiction is dispensed by the Greeks and Turks, who agree in the time and manner of Amurath's death at Adrianople.

CHAP.
LXVII.

and death,
A.D. 1467,
Jan. 17.

Episcus, his partial biographers may safely indulge the latitude of romance; but their fictions are exposed by the light of Italian history; and they afford a strong presumption against their own truth, by a fabulous tale of his exploits, when he passed the Adriatic with eight hundred horse to the succour of the king of Naples.* Without disparagement to his fame, they might have owned that he was finally oppressed by the Ottoman powers: in his extreme danger, he applied to pope Pius the second for a refuge in the ecclesiastical state; and his resources were almost exhausted, since Scanderbeg died a fugitive at Lissus on the Venetian territory.<sup>2</sup> His sepulchre was soon violated by the Turkish conquerors; but the janizaries, who wore his bones enchased in a bracelet, declared, by this superstitious amulet, their involuntary reverence for his valour. The instant ruin of his country may redound to the hero's glory: yet, had he balanced the consequences of submission and resistance, a patriot

* See the narrative of his Calabrian expedition in the ninth and tenth books of Martino Barletius, which may be verified by the testimony or silence of Muretus (Annali d'Italia, tom. III. p. 281), and his original authors (John Simonetta de Roberti Francisci Scriptor, in Minutius, Serape. Rerum Ital. tom. viii. p. 728, et alibi). The Albanian country, under the name of Aracutia, soon became famous in the wars of Italy; (Memories de Comines, l. viii. c. 3).

<sup>2</sup> Spoudovius, from the best evidence and the most rational criticism, has reduced the great Scanderbeg to the human size (A. D. 1461, No. 50, 1463, No. 6, 1463, No. 17, 13, 1467, No. 1). His own letter to the pope, and the testimony of Phrissa (l. III. c. 28), a refugee in the neighbouring isle of Corfu, demonstrate his last distress, which is awkwardly concealed by Martino Barletius (l. 7).

perhaps would have declined the unequal contest, which must depend on the life and genius of one man. Scanderbeg might indeed be supported by the rational, though fallacious hope, that the pope, the king of Naples, and the Venetian republic, would join in the defence of a free and christian people, who guarded the sea coast of the Adriatic, and the narrow passage from Greece to Italy. His infant son was saved from the national shipwreck; the Castriots<sup>1</sup> were invested with a Neapolitan dukedom, and their blood continues to flow in the noblest families of the realm. A colony of Albanian fugitives obtained a settlement in Calabria, and they preserve at this day the language and manners of their ancestors.<sup>2</sup>

In the long career of the decline and fall of the Roman empire, I have reached at length the last reign of the princes of Constantinople, who so feebly sustained the name and majesty of the Cæsars. On the decease of John Palæologus, who survived about four years the Hungarian crusade,<sup>3</sup> the royal family, by the death of Andronicus, and the monastic profession of Isidore, was reduced to three princes, Constantine, Demetrius, and Thomas, the surviving sons of the

<sup>1</sup> See the family of the Castriots, in Duxerges (Fam. Dalmatice, &c. Vind. p. 348-350).

<sup>2</sup> This colony of Albanians is mentioned by Mr. Schubarer (Travels into the two Sicilies, vol. i. p. 330-334).

<sup>3</sup> The chronology of Phocas is thus and not correct; but lasted of four years and seven months. Spoulamus (A. D. 1445. No. 5) assigns seven or eight years to the reign of the last Constantine, which he deduces from a spurious epistle of Eugenius IV. to the king of Ruffia.

<sup>4</sup> Constantine the last of the Romans or Great emperors, A. D. 1445, Nov. 8—A. D. 1453, May 29.

CHAP.
LXVII.

emperor Manuel. Of these the first and the last were far distant in the Morea; but Demetrius, who possessed the domain of Selybria, was in the suburbs, at the head of a party: his ambition was not chilled by the public distress; and his conspiracy with the Turks and the schismatics had already disturbed the peace of his country. The funeral of the late emperor was accelerated with singular and even suspicious haste: the claim of Demetrius to the vacant throne was justified by a trite and dingy sophism, that he was born in the purple, the eldest son of his father's reign. But the empress-mother, the senate and soldiers, the clergy and people, were unanimous in the cause of the lawful successor; and the despot Thomas, who, ignorant of the change, accidentally returned to the capital, asserted with becoming zeal the interest of his absent brother. An ambassador, the historian Phranza, was immediately dispatched to the court of Adrianople. Amurath received him with honour, and dismissed him with gifts; but the gracious approbation of the Turkish sultan announced his supremacy, and the approaching downfall of the eastern empire. By the hands of two illustrious deputies, the imperial crown was placed at Sparta on the head of Constantine. In the spring he sailed from the Morea, escaped the encounter of a Turkish squadron, enjoyed the acclamations of his subjects, celebrated the festival of a new reign, and exhausted by his donatives the treasure, or rather the indigence, of the state. The emperor immediately resigned to his brothers the possession of the Morea; and the brittle friendship of the two princes, Demetrius and Thomas, was confirmed in their mother's presence by the frail security of oaths and embraces. His next occupation was the choice of a consort. A daughter of the doge of Venice had been proposed; but the Byzantine nobles objected the distance between an hereditary monarch and an elective magistrate; and in their subsequent distress, the chief of that powerful republic was not unmindful of the affront. Constantine afterwards hesitated between the royal families of Trebizond and Georgia: and the embassy of Phraza represents in his public and private life the last days of the Byzantine empire.<sup>a</sup>

The protovestiare, or great chamberlain, Phraza, sailed from Constantinople as minister of a bridegroom; and the relics of wealth and luxury were applied to his pompous appearance. His numerous retinue consisted of nobles and guards, of physicians and monks: he was attended by a band of music; and the term of his costly embassy was protracted above two years. On his arrival in Georgia or Iberia, the natives from the towns and villages flocked around the strangers; and such was their simplicity, that they were delighted with the effects, without understanding the cause, of musical harmony. Among the crowd was an old man, above an hundred years of age, who had formerly been carried away a captive

Chamberlain
of Phraza,
p. 8. 1400-
1402.

<sup>a</sup> Phraza (l. iii. c. 1-6) deserves credit and notice.

CHAP.
LXVII.

*****

by the barbarians,* and who amused his hearers with a tale of the wonders of India,† from whence he had returned to Portugal by an unknown sea.‡ From this hospitable land Phranza proceeded to the court of Trebizond, where he was informed by the Greek prince of the recent decease of Amurath. Instead of rejoicing in the deliverance, the experienced statesman expressed his apprehension that an ambitious youth would not long adhere to the sage and pacific system of his father. After the sultan's decease, his christian wife Maria,§ the daughter of the Servian despot, had been honourably restored to her parents: on the fame of her beauty and merit, she was recommended by the ambassador as the most worthy object of the royal choice; and Phranza

* Suppose him to have been captured in 1394, as Timour's first war in Georgia (Shahrokhshah, l. iii. c. 50); he might follow his Tartar master into Hindostan in 1399, and from thence sail to the spice islands.

† The happy and pious Indians lived an hundred and fifty years, and enjoyed the most perfect productions of the vegetable and mineral kingdoms. The animals were on a large scale; dragons seventy cubits, ants (the former Indian) nine fathoms long, sheep like elephants, elephants like sheep. Quiddibet abundant, &c.

‡ He sailed in a country vessel from the spice islands to one of the ports of the exterior India; inventaque navem grandem Periclit, quâ in Portugalliam est delatus. This passage, composed in 1477 (Phranza, l. iii. c. 38), twenty years before the discovery of the Cape of Good Hope, is spurious or wonderful. But this new geography is sullied by the old and incompatible error, which places the source of the Nile in India.

§ Constant (p. 53), who styles her the daughter of Cassius Ogli, and the Helen of the Servians, places her marriage with Amurath in the year 1424. It will not easily be believed, that in six-and-twenty years cohabitation, the sultan corpus ejus non tetigit. After the taking of Constantinople, she fled to Mahomet ii (Phranza, l. iii. c. 22).

recapitulates and refutes the specious objections that might be raised against the proposal. The majesty of the purple would ennoble an unequal alliance; the bar of affinity might be removed by liberal alms and the dispensation of the church; the disgrace of Turkish nuptials had been repeatedly overlooked; and, though the fair Maria was near fifty years of age, she might yet hope to give an heir to the empire. Constantine listened to the advice, which was transmitted in the first ship that sailed from Trebizond; but the factions of the court opposed his marriage; and it was finally prevented by the pious vow of the sultana, who ended her days in the monastic profession. Reduced to the first alternative, the choice of Phranza was decided in favour of a Georgian princess; and the vanity of her father was dazzled by the glorious alliance. Instead of demanding, according to the primitive and national custom, a price for his daughter,* he offered a portion of fifty-six thousand, with an annual pension of five thousand, ducats; and the services of the ambassador were repaid by an assurance, that as his son had been adopted in baptism by the emperor, the establishment of his daughter should be the peculiar care of the empress of Constantinople. On the return of Phranza, the treaty was ratified by the Greek monarch, who with his own hand impressed three vermilion crosses on the golden bull, and assured the Georgian envoy, that in the

* The classical reader will recollect the offers of Agamemnon (Iliad, b. 9, 144), and the general practice of antiquity.

CHAP.
LXXV.

Some of the Dignitaries
of the court.

spring his gallies should conduct the bride to her imperial palace. But Constantine embraced his faithful servant, not with the cold approbation of a sovereign, but with the warm confidence of a friend, who, after a long absence, is impatient to pour his secrets into the bosom of his friend.

"Since the death of my mother and of Cantacuzene, who alone advised me without interest or passion," I am surrounded," said the emperor, "by men whom I can neither love, nor trust, nor esteem. You are not a stranger to Lucas Notaras, the great admiral; obstinately attached to his own sentiments, he declares, both in private and public, that his sentiments are the absolute measure of my thoughts and actions. The rest of the courtiers are swayed by their personal or factious views; and how can I consult the monks on questions of policy and marriage? I have yet much employment for your diligence and fidelity. In the spring you shall engage one of my brothers to solicit the succour of the Western powers; from the Morea you shall sail to Cyprus on a particular commission; and from thence proceed to Georgia, to receive and conduct the future empress." "Your commands," replied Phranza, "are irresistible; but deign, great sir," he added, with a serious smile, "to consider, that if I am thus perpetually absent from my family, my * Cantacuzene (I am ignorant of his relation to the emperor of that name) was great domestic, a firm master of the Greek sword, and a brother of the queen of Servia; whom he visited with the character of ambassador (Syropulus, p. 37, 38, 43).

" wife may be tempted either to seek another husband, or to throw herself into a monastery." CHAP.
LXVII.

After laughing at his apprehensions, the emperor more gravely consoled him, by the pleasing assurance that this should be his last service abroad, and that he destined for his son a wealthy and noble heiress: for himself, the important office of great logothete, or principal minister of state. The marriage was immediately stipulated: but the office, however incompatible with his own, had been usurped by the ambition of the admiral. Some delay was requisite to negotiate a consent and an equivalent; and the nomination of Phranza was half declared, and half suppressed, lest it might be displeasing to an insolent and powerful favourite. The winter was spent in the preparations of his embassy; and Phranza had resolved that the youth his son should embrace this opportunity of foreign travel, and be left, on the appearance of danger, with his maternal kindred of the Morea. Such were the private and public designs, which were interrupted by a Turkish war, and finally buried in the ruins of the empire.

CHAP. LXVIII.

Reign and character of Mahomet the second.—Siege, assault, and final conquest, of Constantinople by the Turks.—Death of Constantine Palæologus.—Servitude of the Greeks.—Extinction of the Roman empire in the East.—Consternation of Europe.—Conquests and death of Mahomet the second.

CHAP.
LXVIII.

Character
of Mahomet
the 2d.

THE siege of Constantinople by the Turks attracts our first attention to the person and character of the great destroyer. Mahomet the second<sup>a</sup> was the son of the second Amurath; and though his mother has been decorated with the titles of christian and princess, she is more probably confounded with the numerous concubines who peopled from every climate the harem of the sultan. His first education and sentiments were those of a devout mussulman; and as often as he conversed with an infidel, he purified his hands and face by the legal rites of ablution. Age and empire appear to have relaxed this narrow bigotry; his aspiring genius disdained to acknowledge a power above his own; and in his looser hours he presumed (it is said) to brand the prophet of Mecca as a robber and impostor. Yet the sultan persevered in a decent reverence for the doctrine and discipline of the koran;<sup>a</sup> his private indiscretion must have been sacred from the vulgar ear; and we should suspect the credulity of strangers and sectaries, so prone to believe that a mind which is hardened against truth must be armed with superior contempt for absurdity and error. Under the tuition of the most skilful masters, Mahomet advanced with an early and rapid progress in the paths of knowledge; and besides his native tongue, it is affirmed that he spoke or understood five languages,<sup>b</sup> the Arabic, the Persian, the Chaldean or Hebrew, the Latin, and the Greek. The Persian might indeed contribute to his amusement, and the Arabic to his edification; and such studies are familiar to the Oriental youth. In the intercourse of the Greeks and Turks, a conqueror might wish to converse with the people over whom he was ambitious to reign; his own praises in Latin poetry<sup>c</sup> or

<sup>a</sup> For the character of Mahomet II. it is dangerous to trust either the Turks or the christians. The most moderate picture appears to be drawn by Phraura (l. i. c. 32), whose resentment had cooled in age and solitude: see likewise Spandemius (s. v. 1451, No. 11), and the continuator of Henry item. xiii. p. 537, the Elæges of Pontus Jovius (l. iii. p. 164-168), and the Dictionnaire de Bayle (tom. 36, p. 373-379).

CHAR.
LXXVIII.
.....

<sup>a</sup> Contesque (p. 116), and the mosque which he founded, attest his public regard for religion. Mahomet freely disputed with the patriarch Eutychius on the two religions (Spoud. i. c. 1437, No. 77).

<sup>b</sup> Quinque linguas prout sunt potuit: Græcæ, Latinæ, Chaldeæ, Persicæ. The Latin translation of Plinius has dropped the Arabic, which the learned must recommend to every musician.

<sup>c</sup> Philadelphus, by a Latin ode, requested and obtained the liberty of his wife's mother and sisters from the company of Constantinople. It was delivered into the sultan's hands by the eunuchs of the Duke of Athens. Philadelphus himself was suspected of a design of passing to Constantinople; yet the sultan often awarded the stranger of Italy, nor lost his life by M. Lascaris, in the Mémoires de l'Académie des Inscriptions, tom. 2, p. 119, 124, &c.

CHAP.
LXVIII.

prose,* might find a passage to the royal ear; but what use or merit could recommend to the statesman or the scholar the uncouth dialect of his Hebrew slaves? The history and geography of the world were familiar to his memory: the lives of the heroes of the East, perhaps of the West,† excited his emulation; his skill in astrology is excused by the folly of the times, and supposes some rudiments of mathematical science; and a profane taste for the arts is betrayed in his liberal invitation and reward of the painters of Italy.‡ But the influence of religion and learning were employed without effect on his savage and licentious nature. I will not transcribe, nor do I firmly believe, the stories of his fourteen pages, whose bellies were ripped open in search of a stolen melon; or of the beautiful slave, whose head he severed from her body, to convince the janizaries that their master was not the votary of love. His sobriety is attested by the silence of the Turkish annals, which accuse three, and three only, of the

* Robert Valturio published at Verona, in 1483, his twelve books de Re Militari, in which he first mentions the use of bombs. By his patron Sigismund Malatesta, prince of Rimini, it had been addressed with a Latin epistle to Mahomet II.

† According to Ficinus, he studiously studied the lives and actions of Alexander, Augustus, Constantine, and Theodosius. I have read somewhere, that Plutarch's Lives were translated by his orders into the Turkish language. If the sultan himself understood Greek, it must have been for the benefit of his subjects. Yet these lives are a school of freedom as well as of honour.

‡ The famous Gentile Bellini, whom he had invited from Venice, was ill-treated with a chain and collar of gold, and a purse of 2000 ducats. With Valturio I laugh at the foolish story of a slave purposely beheaded, to instruct the painter in the action of the muscles.

Ottoman line of the vice of drunkenness.<sup>3</sup> But CHAP.
LXVIII.
~~~~~
it cannot be denied that his passions were at once furious and inexorable; that in the palace, as in the field, a torrent of blood was spilt on the slightest provocation; and that the noblest of the captive youth were often dishonoured by his unnatural lust. In the Albanian war, he studied the lessons, and soon surpassed the example, of his father; and the conquest of two empires, twelve kingdoms, and two hundred cities, a vain and flattering account, is ascribed to his invincible sword. He was doubtless a soldier, and possibly a general: Constantinople has sealed his glory; but if we compare the means, the obstacles, and the achievements, Mahomet the second must blush to sustain a parallel with Alexander or Timour. Under his command, the Ottoman forces were always more numerous than their enemies; yet their progress was bounded by the Euphrates and the Adriatic; and his arms were checked by Huniades and Scanderbeg, by the Rhodian knights, and by the Persian king.

In the reign of Amurath, he twice tasted of <sup>his race,</sup> royalty, and twice descended from the throne: <sup>July 1431,</sup> <sup>Feb. 9,</sup> his tender age was incapable of opposing his father's restoration, but never could he forgive the vizirs who had recommended that salutary measure. His nuptials were celebrated with the daughter of a Turkman emir; and after a festival <sup>July 1461,</sup> <sup>July 3.</sup>

<sup>3</sup> These imperial drunkards were Soliman 2, Selim II, and Amurath IV. (Cantemir, p. 41). The empire of Persia can produce a more regular succession; and in the last age, our European travellers were the witnesses and participants of their revels.

CHAP.
LXVIII

of two months, he departed from Adrianople with his bride to reside in the government of Magnesia. Before the end of six weeks he was recalled by a sudden message from the divan, which announced the decease of Amurath, and the mutinous spirit of the janizaries. His speed and vigour commanded their obedience; he passed the Hellespont with a chosen guard; and at the distance of a mile from Adrianople, the vizirs and emirs, the imams and cadhis, the soldiers and the people, fell prostrate before the new sultan. They affected to weep, they affected to rejoice; he ascended the throne at the age of twenty-one years, and removed the cause of sedition by the death, the inevitable death, of his infant brothers.<sup>1</sup> The ambassadors of Europe and Asia soon appeared to congratulate his accession and solicit his friendship; and to all he spoke the language of moderation and peace. The confidence of the Greek emperor was revived by the solemn oaths and fair assurances with which he sealed the ratification of the treaty: and a rich domain on the banks of the Strymon was assigned for the annual payment of three hundred thousand aspers, the pension of an Ottoman prince, who was detained at his request in the Byzantine court. Yet the neighbours of Mahomet might tremble at the severity with which a youthful monarch reformed the pomp of his father's household: the expences of luxury were applied to those of ambition, and a useless train of seven thousand falconers was either dismissed from his service, or enlisted in his troops. In the first summer of his reign, he visited with an army the Asiatic provinces; but after humbling the pride, Mahomet accepted the submission, of the Caramanian, that he might not be diverted by the smallest obstacle from the execution of his great design.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Calapit, one of those royal infants, was saved from his cruel brethren, and baptized at Rome under the name of Callistus Ottomanus. The emperor Frederick III presented him with an estate in Austria, where he ended his life; and Cuspinian, who in his youth conversed with the aged prince at Vienna, applauds his piety and wisdom (de Constantinis, p. 672, 473).

CHAP.
XVIII.

The mahometan, and more especially the Turkish, caustics have pronounced that no promise can blind the faithful against the interest and duty of their religion; and that the sultan may abrogate his own treaties and those of his predecessors. The justice and magnanimity of Amurath had scorned this immoral privilege; but his son, though the proudest of men, could stoop from ambition to the basest arts of dissimulation and deceit. Peace was on his lips, while war was in his heart; he incessantly sighed for the possession of Constantinople; and the Greeks, by their own indiscretion, afforded the first pretence of the fatal rupture.<sup>3</sup> Instead of labouring to be far-

Hostile institutions of Mahomet, p. 1451.

<sup>2</sup> See the accession of Mahomet II. to Thoms (i. 37), Pharus (p. 1, c. 33, l. iii, c. 2), Chalcomylas (i. ch. p. 106), and Cantimir (p. 96).

<sup>3</sup> Before I enter on the siege of Constantinople I shall observe, that except the short hints of Cantimir and Lancelotus, I have not been able to obtain any Turkish account of this conquest; such an account as we possess of the siege of Rhodes by Sultan II. (Moultou de l'Académie des Inscriptions, tom. xvi, p. 125-169). I must, therefore, depend on the Greeks, whose prejudices, in some degree, are subdued by their distress. Our standard works are those of Ducas (p. 31-42), Pharus (l. iii, c. 5-20), Chalcomylas (i. vii, p. 201-214), gotten, their ambassadors pursued his camp, to demand the payment, and even the increase, of their annual stipend; the divan was importuned by their complaints, and the vizir, a secret friend of the christians, was constrained to deliver the sense of his brethren. "Ye foolish and miserable Romanians," said Calil, "we know your devices, and ye are ignorant of your own danger! the scrupulous Amurath is no more; his throne is occupied by a young conqueror, whom no laws can bind, and no obstacles can resist; and if you escape from his hands, give praise to the divine clemency, which yet delays the chastisement of your sins. Why do ye seek to affright us by vain and indirect menaces? Release the fugitive Orchan, crown him sultan of Romania; call the Hungarians from beyond the Danube; arm against us the nations of the West; and he assured that you will only provoke and precipitate your ruin." But if the fears of the ambassadors were alarmed by the stern language of the vizir, they were soothed by the courteous audience and friendly speeches of the Ottoman 214), and Lazarides Chionis (Historia C. P. 4 Tomo cyprum, Neuwiedberg, 1344, in quarto, twenty leaves). The last of these versions is the earliest in date, since it was composed in the Isle of Cydon, the 14th of August 1433, only seventy-nine days after the loss of the city, and in the first effusions of ideas and passions. Some hints may be added from an epistle of cardinal Isidore (the Ferrarius Historia Turcorum, vel calicum Chalcocondylæ, Clapnet, Basil, 1558) to pope Nicholas v, and a tract of Theodorus Sygismundus, which he addressed in the year 1551 to Martinus Crimus (Threo. Græciæ, L. L. p. 74-92, Basil, 1564). The various facts and materials are briefly, though critically, reviewed by Spandanus (v. c. 1433, No. 1-27). The literary relations of Mommsen and the distant Latins, I shall take leave to disregard.

CHAP.
LXVIII.

prince; and Mahomet assured them that, on his return to Adrianople, he would redress the grievances, and consult the true interest, of the Greeks. No sooner had he repassed the Hellespont, than he issued a mandate to suppress their pension, and to expel their officers from the banks of the Strymon: in this measure he betrayed an hostile mind; and the second order announced, and in some degree commenced, the siege of Constantinople. In the narrow pass of the Bosphorus, an Asiatic fortress had formerly been raised by his grandfather: in the opposite situation, on the European side, he resolved to erect a more formidable castle; and a thousand masons were commanded to assemble in the spring on a spot named Asomatou, about five miles from the Greek metropolis.<sup>a</sup> Persuasion is the resource of the feeble; and the feeble can seldom persuade: the ambassadors of the emperor attempted, without success, to divert Mahomet from the execution of his design. They represented that his grandfather had solicited the permission of Manuel to build a castle on his own territories; but that this double fortification, which would command the strait, could only tend to violate the alliance of the nations; to intercept the Latins who traded in the Black sea, and perhaps to annihilate the subsistence of the city. "I form no enterprise," replied the perfidious sub-<sup>a</sup> The situation of the fortress, and the topography of the Bosphorus, are best traced from Peter Oyllius (de Bosphoro Thracico, l. ii. c. 13), Isaac Comnenus (Pandect. p. 443), and Tournefort (Voyage dans le Levant, tom. ii. lettre 20, p. 443, 444); but I must regret the map or plan, which Tournefort sent to the French minister of the marine. The reader may turn back to vol. iii. pp. 37, of this history.

CHAP.
LXVIII.

ian, " against the city; but the empire of Constantinople is measured by her walls. Have you forgot the distress to which my father was reduced, when you formed a league with the Hungarians; when they invaded our country by land, and the Hellespont was occupied by the French gallees? Amurath was compelled to force the passage of the Bosphorus; and your strength was not equal to your malevolence. I was then a child at Adrianople; the Muslims trembled; and, for a while, the gabours* insulted our disgrace. But when my father had triumphed in the field of Warnæ, he vowed to erect a fort on the western shore, and that vow it is my duty to accomplish. Have ye the right, have ye the power, to controul my actions on my own ground? For that ground is my own: as far as the shores of the Bosphorus, Asia is inhabited by the Turks, and Europe is deserted by the Romans. Return, and inform your king, that the present Ottoman is far different from his predecessors; that his resolutions surpass their wishes; and that he performs more than they could resolve. Return in safety—but the next who delivers a similar message may expect to be slayed alive."

After this declaration, Constantine, the first of * The opprobrious name which the Turks bestow on the infidels is expressed hades by Thucyd., and gades by Lucianus and the neo-dramas. The former term is derived by Ducange (Gloss. Græc. tom. i.

p. 130) from hades, in vulgar Greek, a tortoise, as denoting a restortuile motion from the faith. But, alas! gades is no more than gader, which was transferred from the Persian to the Turkish language, from the worshippers of Jot to those of the crucifix (Hers-helot, Bibliothèque Orient. p. 375).

the Greeks in spirit as in rank,* had determined to unsheath the sword, and to resist the approach and establishment of the Turks on the Bosphorus. He was disarmed by the advice of his civil and ecclesiastical ministers, who recommended a system less generous, and even less prudent, than his own, to approve their patience and long-suffering, to brand the Ottoman with the name and guilt of an aggressor, and to depend on chance and time for their own safety, and the destruction of a fort, which could not long be maintained in the neighbourhood of a great and populous city. Amidst hope and fear, the fears of the wise and the hopes of the credulous, the winter rolled away; the proper business of each man, and each hour, was postponed; and the Greeks shut their eyes against the impending danger, till the arrival of the spring, and the sultan decided the assurance of their ruin.

Of a master who never forgives, the orders are seldom disobeyed. On the twenty-sixth of March, the appointed spot of Asomiton was covered with an active swarm of Turkish artificers; and the materials by sea and land were diligently transported from Europe and Asia.<sup>c</sup> The line had

CHAP.
LXVIII.

He builds a fortress on the Bosphorus,
A. = 1437,
March.

* Phraates does justice to his master's wits and courage. Callistionum hominis non ignis imperatoris praece utitur inuicem constituit, nec attingitque the fully of the cum sacri tum profani sacerdotis, which he had heard, mentes quoque vani pueri. Darius was not a party-councillor.

<sup>c</sup> Instead of this clear and consistent account, the Turkish Annals (Cannonie, p. 27) revived the foolish tale of the ox's hide, and Dido's stratagem in the foundation of Carthage. These annals (which we are warned by an antichristian prejudice not to be less valuable than the Greek histories).

CHAP.
LXVIII.

been burnt in Cataphrygia; the timber was cut down in the woods of Heraclea and Nicomedia; and the stones were dug from the Anatolian quarries. Each of the thousand masons was assisted by two workmen; and a measure of two cubits was marked for their daily task. The fortress<sup>a</sup> was built in a triangular form; each angle was flanked by a strong and massy tower; one on the declivity of the hill, two along the sea-shore; a thickness of twenty-two feet was assigned for the walls, thirty for the towers; and the whole building was covered with a solid platform of lead. Mahomet himself pressed and directed the work with indefatigable ardour: his three vizirs claimed the honour of finishing their respective towers; the zeal of the cadhis emulated that of the janizaries; the meanest labour was ennobled by the service of God and the sultan; and the diligence of the multitude was quickened by the eye of a despot, whose smile was the hope of fortune, and whose frown was the messenger of death. The Greek emperor beheld, with terror, the irresistible progress of the work: and vainly strove, by flattery and gifts, to assuage an implacable foe, who sought, and secretly fomented, the slightest occasion of a quarrel. Such occasions must soon and inevitably be found. The ruins of stately churches, and even the marble columns which had been consecrated to St. Michael the archangel, <sup>a</sup> In the dimensions of this fortress, the old castle of Kinsge, Phoenicia does not exactly agree with Chalcrocondyles, whose description has been verified on the spot by his editor Leunclavius.

CHAP.
LXVIII

were employed without scruple by the profane and rapacious Moslems; and some christians, who presumed to oppose the removal, received from their hands the crown of martyrdom. Constantine had solicited a Turkish guard to protect the fields and harvests of his subjects: the guard was fixed; but their first order was to allow free pasture to the mules and horses of the camp, and to defend their brethren if they should be molested by the natives. The retinue of an Ottoman chief had left their horses to pass the night among the ripe corn; the damage was felt; the insult was resented; and several of both nations were slain in a tumultuous conflict. Mahomet listened with joy to the complaint; and a detachment was commanded to exterminate the guilty village: the guilty had fled; but forty innocent and unsuspecting reapers were massacred by the soldiers. Till this provocation, Constantinople had been open to the visits of commerce and curiosity: on the first alarm, the gates were shut; but the emperor, still anxious for peace, released on the third day his Turkish captives; and expressed, in a last message, the firm resignation of a christian and a soldier. "Since neither oaths, nor treaty, nor submission, can secure peace, pursue," said he to Mahomet, "your impious warfare. My trust is in God alone: if it should please him to mollify your heart, I shall rejoice in the happy change; if he delivers

The Turkish war,
June 1

* Among them were some pages of Mahomet, so conscious of his inexorable rigour, that they begged to leave their beds in the city unless they could return before sunset.

CHAP.
LXVIII.

" the city into your hands, I submit without a " murmur to his holy will. But until the Judge " of the earth shall pronounce between us, it is " my duty to live and die in the defence of my " people." The sultan's answer was hostile and decisive: his fortifications were completed; and before his departure for Adrianople, he stationed a vigilant Aga and four hundred janizaries to levy a tribute of the ships of every nation that should pass within the reach of their cannon. A Venetian vessel, refusing obedience to the new lords of the Bosphorus, was sunk with a single bullet. The master and thirty sailors escaped in the boat; but they were dragged in chains to the ports: the chief was impaled; his companions were beheaded; and the historian Ducos' behest, at Demotica, their bodies exposed to the wild beasts. The siege of Constantinople was deferred till the ensuing spring; but an Ottoman army marched into the Morea to divert the force of the brothers of Constantine. At this era of calamity, one of these princes, the despot Thomas, was blessed or afflicted with the birth of a son; " the " last heir," says the plaintive Phranza, " of the " last spark of the Roman empire."

Sept. 1.

1453.
Dec. 11.

Preparations for the siege of Constanti-
nople.

The Greeks and the Turks passed an anxious and sleepless winter; the former were kept awake by their fears, the latter by their hopes; both by * Ducos, c. 33. Phranza II. (4, c. 98, who had sailed in his vessel, commemorates the Venetian pilot as a martyr.

* Auctores ad Palamogrotae grovas, et larpas accedunt, persequuntur Hæmæmonem scintille hæmæmonis, &c. &c. (Phranza, l. iii. c.
 7.) This strong expression was required by the feelings.

the preparations of defence and attack ; and the two emperors, who had the most to lose or to gain, were the most deeply affected by the national sentiment. In Mahomet, that sentiment was inflamed by the ardour of his youth and temper; he amused his leisure with building at Adrianople the lofty palace of Jehan Numa (the watch-tower of the world); but his serious thoughts were irrevocably bent on the conquest of the city of Cæsar. At the dead of night, about the second watch, he started from his bed, and commanded the instant attendance of his prime vizir. The message, the hour, the prince, and his own situation, alarmed the guilty conscience of Calil Basha; who had possessed the confidence, and advised the restoration, of Amurath. On the accession of the son, the vizir was confirmed in his office and the appearances of favour; but the veteran statesman was not insensible that he trode on a thin and slippery ice, which might break under his footsteps, and plunge him in the abyss. His friendship for the christians, which might be innocent under the late reign, had stigmatised him with the name of Gabour Ortachi, or foster-brother of the infidels; and his avarice entertained a venal and treasonable correspondence, which was detected and punished after the con-

CHAP.
LXVIII.
-----
A. D. 1452,
September
A. H. 7453,
April.

* Commen. p. 57. 58. The sultan was rather doubtful of his conquest, or ignorant of the superior secrets of Constantinople. A city or kingdom may sometimes be ruined by the improper fortune of their sovereigns.

* Traveller, by the president Corbin, is translated post mortem, and incorrectly instead from the Latin version; but in his history, he has overlooked the note by which Jean de Baillet and Duran, c. 34, acknowledge and rectify his own error.

CHAP.
LXVIII.

clusion of the war. On receiving the royal mandate, he embraced, perhaps for the last time, his wife and children; filled a cup with pieces of gold, hastened to the palace, adored the sultan, and offered, according to the Oriental custom, the slight tribute of his duty and gratitude.* "It is not my wish," said Mahomet, "to resume my gifts, but rather to heap and multiply them on thy head. In my turn I ask a present far more valuable and important;—Constantinople." As soon as the vizir had recovered from his surprise, "the same God," said he, "who has already given thee so large a portion of the Roman empire, will not deny the remnant, and the capital. His providence, and thy power, assure thy success; and myself, with the rest of thy faithful slaves, will sacrifice our lives and fortunes." "Lala," (or perceptor), continued the sultan, "do you see this pillow? all the night, in my agitation, I have pulled it on one side and on the other; I have risen from my bed, again have I lain down; yet sleep has not visited these weary eyes. Beware of the gold and silver of the Romans: in arms we are superior; and with the aid of God, and " the prayers of the prophet, we shall speedily

* The Oriental custom of offer appearing without gifts before a sovereign or a superior is of high antiquity, and seems analogous with the idea of sacrifice, still more ancient and universal. See the examples of such Persian gifts, Ellen, Hist. Var. i. 4, c. 31, 32, 33.

* The Lala of the Turks (Caumont, p. 249, and the Tale of the Greeks (Quincy, c. 331), are derived from the manual language of slaves; and it may be observed, that all such primitive words which denote their province, are the simple repetition of one syllable, compound of a labial or dental consonant and an open vowel (see Brotius, Metaphysica de Langue, tom. 1, p. 211-247).

 " become masters of Constantinople." To sound the disposition of his soldiers, he often wandered through the streets alone, and in disguise; and it was fatal to discover the sultan, when he wished to escape from the vulgar eye. His hours were spent in delineating the plan of the hostile city; in debating with his generals and engineers on what spot he should erect his batteries: on which side he should assault the walls; where he should spring his mines; to what place he should apply his scaling-ladders; and the exercises of the day repeated and proved the lucubrations of the night.

Among the implements of destruction, he studied with peculiar care the recent and tremendous discovery of the Latins; and his artillery surpassed whatever had yet appeared in the world.
 A founder of cannon, a Dane or Hungarian, who had been almost starved in the Greek service, de-sorted to the Moslems, and was liberally entertained by the Turkish sultan. Mahomet was satisfied with the answer to his first question, which he eagerly pressed on the artist. "Am I able to " cast a cannon capable of throwing a ball or " stone of sufficient size to batter the walls of " Constantinople?" "I am not ignorant of their " strength; but were they more solid than those " of Babylon, I could oppose an engine of su" perior power: the position and management of " that engine must be left to your engineers." On this assurance, a foundery was established at Adrianople; the metal was prepared; and at the

CHAP.
 LXVIII.

The great success of Mahomet.

CHAP.
LXVIII.

end of three months, Urban produced a piece of brass ordnance of stupendous, and almost incredible, magnitude: a measure of twelve palms is assigned to the bore; and the stone bullet weighed above six hundred pounds.<sup>a</sup> A vacant place before the new palace was chosen for the first experiment; but to prevent the sudden and mischievous effects of astonishment and fear, a proclamation was issued, that the cannon would be discharged the ensuing day. The explosion was felt or heard in a circuit of an hundred furlongs; the ball, by the force of gunpowder, was driven above a mile; and on the spot where it fell, it buried itself a fathom deep in the ground. For the conveyance of this destructive engine, a frame or carriage of thirty waggons was linked together, and drawn along by a team of sixty oxen: two hundred men on both sides were stationed to poise or support the rolling weight; two hundred and fifty workmen marched before to smooth the way and repair the bridges; and near two months were employed in a laborious journey of one hundred and fifty miles. A lively philosopher<sup>b</sup> derides on this occasion the credulity of the Greeks, and observes, with much reason, that we should always distrust the exaggerations of a vanquished people. He calculates, that a ball, even of two hundred pounds, would require a charge of one hundred and fifty pounds of powder; and that the stroke would be feeble and impotent, since not a fiftieth part of the mass could be indurged at the same instant. A stranger as I am to the art of destruction, I can discern that the modern improvements of artillery prefer the number of pieces to the weight of metal; the quickness of the fire to the sound, or even the consequence, of a single explosion. Yet I dare not reject the positive and unanimous evidence of contemporary writers; nor can it seem improbable, that the first artists, in their rude and ambitious efforts, should have transgressed the standard of moderation. A Turkish cannon, more enormous than that of Mahomet, still guards the entrance of the Dardanellies; and if the use be inconvenient, it has been found on a late trial that the effect was far from contemptible. A stone bullet of eleven hundred pounds weight was once discharged with three hundred and thirty pounds of powder; at the distance of six hundred yards, it shivered into three rocky fragments, traversed the strait, and leaving the waters in a foam, again rose and bounded against the opposite hill.

<sup>a</sup> The Græci valued weight about sixty names, or denominations; and the Hebræi on Ancient Weights, Measures, &c. &c. but, among the modern Grecis, that single appellation was extended to a weight of one hundred, or one hundred and twenty-five pounds (Obraque ex-ferens). Isidorus Chrysostomus measured the ball or stone of the second cannon: Tophetum, quæ palmis quatuordecim et modo notatum in grece.

<sup>b</sup> See Vallartius (Hist. Generale, c. xiv. p. 294, 295). He was an admirer of universal monarchy; and the poet frequently asperses with the name and style of an astronomer, a chemist, &c.

* The Baron de Tott (Ann. iii. p. 83-84), who fortified the Dardanelles against the Russians, describes it a forty, and sometimes, within his own presence, and the consumption of six Turcs. But this extraordinary traveller does not possess the usual quality of any traveller.

CHAP.
LXVIII.

Mahomet
in forms
the siege of Constantinople,
A. D. 1453,
April 6.

While Mahomet threatened the capital of the East, the Greek emperor implored with fervent prayers the assistance of earth and heaven. But the invisible powers were deaf to his supplications; and Christendom beheld with indifference the fall of Constantinople, while she derived at least some promise of supply from the jealous and temporal policy of the sultan of Egypt. Some states were too weak, and others too remote; by some the danger was considered as imaginary, by others as inevitable: the Western princes were involved in their endless and domestic quarrels; and the Roman pontiff was exasperated by the falsehood or obstinacy of the Greeks. Instead of employing in their favour the arms and treasures of Italy, Nicholas the fifth had foretold their approaching ruin; and his honour was engaged in the accomplishment of his prophecy. Perhaps he was softened by the last extremity of their distress; but his compassion was tardy; his efforts were faint and unavailing; and Constantinople had fallen, before the squadrons of Genoa and Venice could sail from their harbours.<sup>d</sup> Even the princes of the Morea and of the Greek islands affected a cold neutrality; the Genoese colony of Galatia negotiated a private treaty; and the sultan indulged them in the delusive hope, that by his clemency they might survive the ruin of the em-

<sup>d</sup> Non infertit, indignum duxerit, says the honest Antoninus; but as the Roman emperor was afterwards grieved and ashamed, we find the more exactly expression of Plinius, in animo tulit postulat perire Græcos, and the positive assertion of Julius Syriacus, cunctam gloriam, &c. (Spond. A. D. 1453, No. 3).

plebe. A plebeian crowd, and some Byzantine nobles, basely withdrew from the danger of their country; and the avarice of the rich denied the emperor, and reserved for the Turks, the secret treasures which might have raised in their defence whole armies of mercenaries.* The indigent and solitary prince prepared however to sustain his formidable adversary; but if his courage were equal to the peril, his strength was inadequate to the contest. In the beginning of the spring, the Turkish vanguard swept the towns and villages as far as the gates of Constantinople: submission was spared and protected: whatever presumed to resist was exterminated with fire and sword. The Greek places on the Black sea, Mesembria, Acheloum, and Bizon, surrendered on the first summons; Selybria alone deserved the honours of a siege or blockade; and the bold inhabitants, while they were invested by land, launched their boats, pillaged the opposite coast of Cyzicus, and sold their captives in the public market. But on the approach of Mahomet himself all was silent and prostrate: he first halted at the distance of five miles; and from thence advancing in battle array, planted before the gate of St. Romanus the imperial standard; and, on the sixth * Antonie, in Proem.—Epist. Cardinal. Isidorus apud Spondanum; and Dr. Johnson, in the tragedy of Irene, has happily seized this characteristic circumstance.

The grinning Greeks dig up the golden cavern,
The accumulated wealth of hoarding ages;
That wealth which, granted to their warring prince,
Had crag'd embattled nations at their gates.

CHAP.
LXVIII.

day of April, formed the memorable siege of Constantinople.

Forces of
the Turks:

The troops of Asia and Europe extended on the right and left from the Propontis to the harbour: the janizaries in the front were stationed before the sultan's tent; the Ottoman line was covered by a deep entrenchment; and a subordinate army inclosed the suburb of Galata, and watched the doubtful faith of the Genoese. The inquisitive Philolphus, who resided in Greece about thirty years before the siege, is confident, that all the Turkish forces, of any name or value, could not exceed the number of sixty thousand horse and twenty thousand foot; and he upbraids the pusillanimity of the nations, who had tamely yielded to a handful of barbarians. Such indeed might be the regular establishment of the capiculi, the troops of the porte, who marched with the prince, and were paid from his royal treasury. But the beaueys, in their respective governments, maintained or levied a provincial militia; many lands were held by a military tenure; many volunteers were attracted by the hope of spoil; and the sound of the holy trumpet invited a swarm of hungry and fearless fanatics, who might contribute at least to multiply the terrors, and in a first attack to blunt the swords, of the christians. The whole mass of the Turkish powers is magnified by

* The palace troops are styled Capiculi, the paratroups, Semendari, and most of the orders and institutions of the Turkish militia existed before the Caissa of Sultana II., from which and his own experience, count Hacıoglu has composed his military code of six thousand verses.

Ducas, Chalcocondyles, and Leonard of Chios, to the amount of three or four hundred thousand men; but Phranza was a less remote and more accurate judge; and his precise definition of two hundred and fifty-eight thousand does not exceed the measure of experience and probability. The navy of the besiegers was less formidable; the Propontis was overspread with three hundred and twenty sail; but of these no more than eighteen could be rated as galleys of war; and the far greater part must be degraded to the condition of storeships and transports, which poured into the camp fresh supplies of men, ammunition, and provisions. In her last decay, Constantinople was still peopled with more than an hundred thousand inhabitants; but these numbers are found in the accounts, not of war, but of captivity; and they mostly consist of mechanics, of priests, of women, and of men devoid of that spirit which even women have sometimes exerted for the common safety. I can suppose, I could almost excuse, the reluctance of subjects to serve on a distant frontier, at the will of a tyrant; but the man who dares not expose his life in the defence of his children and his property has lost in society the first and most active energies of nature. By the emperor's command, a particular inquiry had been made through the streets and houses, how

of the Greeks

* The observation of Philoſophus is approved by Cyprian in the year 1406 his Conſultus, in Epilog. de Milit. Turcicis, p. 48C. Mureſſi proves that the effective number of the Turks are much less numerous than they appear. In the army that beſieged Conſtantinople, Leonardus Chioſus reckons no more than 13,000 Janizaries.

CHAP.
LXVIII.

many of the citizens, or even of the monks, were able and willing to bear arms for their country. The lists were intrusted to Phrausa;<sup>a</sup> and, after a diligent addition, he informed his master, with grief and surprise, that the national defence was reduced to four thousand nine hundred and seventy Romans. Between Constantine and his faithful minister, this comfortless secret was preserved; and a sufficient proportion of shields, cross-bows, and muskets, was distributed from the arsenal to the city hands. They derived some accession from a body of two thousand strangers, under the command of John Justiniani, a noble Genoese: a liberal donative was advanced to these auxiliaries; and a princely recompence, the isle of Lemnos, was promised to the valour and victory of their chief. A strong chain was drawn across the mouth of the harbour: it was supported by some Greek and Italian vessels of war and merchandise; and the ships of every christian nation, that successively arrived from Caudia and the Black sea, were detained for the public service. Against the powers of the Ottoman empire, a city of the extent of thirteen, perhaps of sixteen, miles was defended by a scanty garrison of seven or eight thousand soldiers. Europe and Asia were open to the besiegers; but the strength and provisions of the

<sup>a</sup> Phra, utitur (Hæp.) talibus extrinsecis non adeque felici et modestis, munitionibus quod nec diu ab eis exoritur numerus (Phrausa, l. III, p. 54. With some indulgence for national propensities, we cannot desire a more authentic witness, not only of public facts, but of private counsels.

Greeks must sustain a daily decrease; nor could they indulge the expectation of any foreign succour or supply.

CHAR.
LXVIII.

The primitive Romans would have drawn their swords in the resolution of death or conquest. The primitive christians might have embraced each other, and awaited in patience and charity the stroke of martyrdom; but the Greeks of Constantinople were animated only by the spirit of religion, and that spirit was productive only of animosity and discord. Before his death, the emperor John Palæologus had renounced the unpopular measure of an union with the Latins; nor was the idea revived, till the distress of his brother Constantine imposed a last trial of flattery and dissimulation.* With the demand of temporal aid, his ambassadors were instructed to mingle the assurance of spiritual obedience: his neglect of the church was excused by the urgent cares of the state; and his orthodox wishes solicited the presence of a Roman legate. The Vatican had been too often deluded; yet the signs of repentance could not decently be overlooked; a legate was more easily granted than an army; and about six months before the final destruction, the cardinal Isidore of Russia appeared in that character with a retinue of priests and soldiers. The emperor saluted him as a friend and father; respectfully listened to his public and private ser-

Palæologus of the two churches,
p. 2, 1452,
Dec. 12.

* In Spandauum, the narrative of the union is not only partial, but imperfect. The bishop of Palæstina died in 1642, and the history of Doria, which represents three scenes (c. 36, 37) with much truth and spirit, was not printed till the year 1649.

CHAP.
LXVIII.

mons; and with the most obsequious of the clergy and laymen subscribed the act of union, as it had been ratified in the council of Florence. On the twelfth of December, the two nations, in the church of St. Sophia, joined in the communion of sacrifice and prayer: and the names of the two pontiffs were solemnly commemorated; the names of Nicholas the fifth, the vicar of Christ, and of the patriarch Gregory, who had been driven into exile by a rebellious people.

Obsequy and sacrifice
of the Greeks.

But the dress and language of the Latin priest who officiated at the altar were an object of scandal; and it was observed with horror, that he consecrated a cake or wafer of unblessed bread, and poured cold water into the cup of the sacrament. A national historian acknowledges with a blush, that none of his countrymen, not the emperor himself, were sincere in this occasional conformity.* Their hasty and unconditional submission was palliated by a promise of future revind; but the best, or the worst, of their excuses was the confession of their own perjury. When they were pressed by the reproaches of their honest brethren, "Have patience," they whispered, "have patience till God shall have delivered the city from the great dragon who seeks to devour us. You shall then perceive whether we are truly reconciled with the Azymites." But patience is not the attribute of * PLACIUS, one of the conforming Greeks, acknowledges that the agouture was adopted only poster apud quosdam. He admits with pleasure, that those who refused to perform their devotion in St. Sophia, extra vulgum et in pace essent (l. iii. c. 20).

CHAP.
XXVII.

zeal: nor can the arts of a court be adapted to the freedom and violence of popular enthusiasm. From the dome of St. Sophia the inhabitants of either sex, and of every degree, rushed in crowds to the cell of the monk Gennadius,<sup>1</sup> to consult the oracle of the church. The holy man was invisible; entranced, as it should seem, in deep meditation or divine capture: but he had exposed on the door of his cell a speaking tablet; and they successively withdrew, after reading these tremendous words: "O miserable Romans, why will ye abandon the truth; and why, instead of confiding in God, will ye put your trust in the Italians? In losing your faith, you will lose your city. Have mercy on me, O Lord! I protest in thy presence, that I am innocent of the crime. O miserable Romans, consider, pause, and repent. At the same moment that you renounce the religion of your fathers, by embracing impiety, you submit to a foreign servitude." According to the advice of Gennadius, the religious virgins, as pure as angels, and as proud as demons, rejected the act of union, and abjured all communion with the present and future associates of the Latins; and their example was applauded and imitated by the greatest part of the clergy and people. From the monastery, the devout Greeks dispersed themselves in the taverns; drank confusion to the slaves of the pope; emptied their glasses in honour of the image of the holy virgin; and besought her to defend, against Mahomet, the city which she had formerly saved from Chosroes and the Chagan. In the double intoxication of zeal and wine, they valiantly exclaimed, "What occasion have we for " succour, or union, or Latins? far from us be " the worship of the Azymites!" During the winter that preceded the Turkish conquest, the nation was distracted by this epidemical frenzy; and the season of lent, the approach of easter, instead of breathing charity and love, served only to fortify the obstinacy and influence of the zealots. The confessors scrutinized and alarmed the conscience of their votaries, and a rigorous penance was imposed on those who had received the communion from a priest, who had given an express or tacit consent to the union. His service at the altar propagated the infection to the mute and simple spectators of the ceremony: they forfeited, by the impure spectacle, the virtue of the sacerdotal character; nor was it lawful, even in danger of sudden death, to invoke the assistance of their prayers or absolution. No sooner had the church of St. Sophia been polluted by the Latin sacrifice, than it was deserted as a Jewish synagogue, or an heathen temple, by the clergy and people; and a vast and gloomy silence prevailed in that venerable dome, which had so often smoked with a cloud of incense, blazed with innumerable lights, and resounded with the voice of prayer and thanksgiving. The Latins were the most odious of heretics and infidels; and the first minister of the empire, the great duke, was heard to declare, that he had rather behold in Constantinople the turban of Mahomet, than the pope's tiara or a cardinal's hat.<sup>a</sup> A sentiment so unworthy of christians and patriots, was familiar and fatal to the Greeks: the emperor was deprived of the affection and support of his subjects; and their native cowardice was sanctified by resignation to the divine decree, or the visionary hope of a miraculous deliverance.

<sup>1</sup> His primitive and familiar name was George Scholasticus, which he changed for that of Gennadius, either when he became a monk or a patriarch. His defence, at Florence, of the same union which he so furiously attacked at Constantinople, has tempted Leo Allatius (Dissert. de Georgio, in Patrol. Bolland. Cass. tom. 2. p. 76) to say, "Quid hoc hominem esse credimus? nisi Bonaventuram?" (p. 342-343) has restored the identity of his person and the duplicity of his character.

Of the triangle which composes the figure of Constantinople, the two sides along the sea were made inaccessible to an enemy: the Propontis by nature, and the harbour by art. Between the two waters, the basis of the triangle, the land side was protected by a double wall, and a deep ditch of the depth of one hundred feet. Against this line of fortification, which Phraſia, an eye-witness, prolongs to the measure of six miles,<sup>b</sup> the Ottomans directed their principal attack: and the emperor, after distributing the service and command of the most perilous stations, undertook the defence of the external wall. In the first days of the siege, the Greek soldiers descended into the

CHAP.
LXVIII.

Siege of Constantinople by Mahomet
II.
A. D. 1453.
April 6-
May 29.

<sup>a</sup> passion, volonte, may be fairly translated, a cardinal's hat. The difference of the Greek and Latin habits embittered the schism.

<sup>b</sup> We are obliged to reduce the Greek miles to the smallest measure which is preserved in the works of Hæſius, of 512 French toises, and of 104 thousand-fifty to a degree. The six miles of Phraſia do not exceed five English miles (cf. Anville, Mémoires Géographiques, p. 21-22, &c.).

CHAP.
LXVIII

ditch, or sallied into the field; but they soon discovered that, in the proportion of their numbers, one christian was of more value than twenty Turks; and, after these bold preludes, they were prudently content to maintain the rampart with their missile weapons. Nor should this prudence be accused of pusillanimity. The nation was indeed pusillanimous and base; but the last Constantine deserves the name of a hero: his noble band of volunteers was inspired with Roman virtue; and the foreign auxiliaries supported the honour of the Western chivalry. The incessant volleys of lances and arrows were accompanied with the smoke, the sound, and the fire of their musketry and cannon. Their small arms discharged at the same time either five, or even ten, balls of lead, of the size of a walnut; and, according to the closeness of the ranks and the force of the powder, several breastplates and bodies were transpierced by the same shot. But the Turkish approaches were soon sunk in trenches, or covered with ruins. Each day added to the science of the christians; but their inadequate stock of gunpowder was wasted in the operations of each day. Their ordnance was not powerful, either in size or number; and if they possessed some heavy cannon, they feared to plant them on the walls, lest the aged structure should be shaken and overthrown by the explosion.* The same destructive

* At India doctissime moniti sunt: parare contra Turcos machinas: missas, quæ tamens ævan obliuiscuntur. Falsis vest aliis: modica exiguæ; tela missiles; bombardæ, et aduersus incommoditate loci primarium hostes secret had been revealed to the Moslems; by whom it was employed with the superiorenery of CHAP. LXVIII.

 zeal, riches, and despotism. The great cannon of Mahomet has been separately noticed; an important and visible object in the history of the times; but that enormous engine was flanked by two fellows almost of equal magnitude: the long order of the Turkish artillery was pointed against the walls: fourteen batteries thundered at once on the most accessible places; and of one of these it is ambiguously expressed, that it was mounted with one hundred and thirty guns, or that it discharged one hundred and thirty bullets. Yet, in the power and activity of the arm, we may discern the infancy of the new science. Under a master who counted the moments, the great cannon could be loaded and fired no more than seven times in one day.<sup>2</sup> The heated metal unfortunately burst; several workmen were destroyed; and the skill of an artist was admired who bethought himself of preventing the danger and the accident, by pouring oil, after each explosion, into the mouth of the cannon.

effundere macerolam atqueq; siccis oleo perfundant. Nemoque mag-no erant, ut miris velocitate rotas, quæstant. This passage of Leonardus Chiensis is curious and important.

<sup>2</sup> According to Chienmenkye and Thunberg, the great cannon burst, an accident which, according to Dugas, was prevented by the artist's skill. It is evident they do not speak of the same gun.

<sup>3</sup> Near an hundred years after the siege of Constantinople, the French and English fleets in the Channel were proud of firing 300 shot in an engagement of ten hours (Mémoires de Marins du Bellay, l. 2, in the Collection Générale, tom. xxi, p. 239).

CHAP.
LXVIII.Attacks and defence.

The first random shots were productive of more sound than effect; and it was by the advice of a christian, that the engineers were taught to level their aim against the two opposite sides of the salient angles of a bastion. However imperfect, the weight and repetition of the fire made some impression on the walls; and the Turks, pushing their approaches to the edge of the ditch, attempted to fill the enormous chasm, and to build a road, to the assault.* Innumerable fascines, and bogs-heads, and trunks of trees, were heaped on each other; and such was the impetuosity of the throng, that the foremost and the weakest were pushed headlong down the precipice, and instantly buried under the accumulated mass. To fill the ditch was the toil of the besiegers; to clear away the rubbish was the safety of the besieged; and, after a long and bloody conflict, the web that had been woven in the day was still unravelled in the night. The next resource of Mahomet was the practice of mines; but the soil was rocky; in every attempt, he was stopped and undermined by the christian engineers; nor had the art been yet invented of replenishing those subterraneous passages with gunpowder, and blowing whole towers and cities into the air.† A circumstance that dis-

* I have selected some curious facts, without striving to simulate On blood and stadium at the siege de Verint, in his prodigious descriptions of the sieges of Rhodes, Malta, &c. But that agreeable Historian had a turn for romance; and as he seems to pursue the order, he had adopted the same spirit of enthusiasm and chivalry.

† The first theory of mines with gunpowder appears in 1480, in a son of George of Saxe (Tuchsch), tom. vi. p. 1, p. 374. They were tinguishes the siege of Constantinople, is the re-union of the ancient and modern artillery. The cannon were intermingled with the mechanical engines for casting stones and darts; the bullet and the battering-ram were directed against the same walls; nor had the discovery of gunpowder superseded the use of the liquid and unextinguishable fire. A wooden turret of the largest size was advanced on rollers: this portable magazine of ammunition and fascines was protected by a three-fold covering of bulwarks: incessant volleys were securely discharged from the loop-holes; in the front, three doors were contrived for the alternate sally and retreat of the soldiers and workmen. They ascended by a stair-case to the upper platform, and as high as the level of that platform, a scaling-ladder could be raised by pulleys to form a bridge, and grapple with the adverse rampart. By these various arts of annoyance, some as new as they were pernicious to the Greeks, the tower of St. Romanus was at length overturned: after a severe struggle, the Turks were repulsed from the breach, and interrupted by darkness; but they trusted, that with the return of light they should renew the attack with fresh vigour and decisive success. Of this pause of action, this interval of hope, each moment was improved by the activity of the emperor and Justinian, who passed the night on the spot, and were first practised at Sarazuela, in 1497: but the manner and improvements in 1503, is ascribed to Peter of Navarre, who sent them with success to the wars of Italy (Hist. de la Ligue de Cambray, tom. iv. p. 93-97).

CHAP.
LXVIII.

.....

urged the labours which involved the safety of the church and city. At the dawn of day, the impatient sultan perceived, with astonishment and grief, that his wooden turret had been reduced to ashes; the ditch was cleared and restored; and the tower of St. Romanns was again strong and entire. He deplored the failure of his design; and uttered a profane exclamation, that the word of the thirty-seven thousand prophets should not have compelled him to believe that such a work, in so short a time, could have been accomplished by the infidels.

Success and victory of four ships.

The generosity of the christian princes was cold and tardy; but in the first apprehension of a siege, Constantine had negotiated, in the isles of the Archipelago, the Morea, and Sicily, the most indispensable supplies. As early as the beginning of April, five<sup>1</sup> great ships, equipped for merchandise and war, would have sailed from the harbour of Chios, had not the wind blown obstinately from the north.* One of these ships bore the imperial flag; the remaining four belonged to the Genoese; and they were laden with wheat and barley, with wine, oil, and vegetables, and, above all, with soldiers and mariners, for the service of the capital. After a tedious delay, a gentle breeze, and, on the second day, a strong gale from the south, carried them through the Hellespont and the Propontis; but the city was already invested by sea and land; and the Turkish fleet, at the entrance of the Bosphorus, was stretched from shore to shore, in the form of a crescent, to intercept, or at least to repel, these bold auxiliaries. The reader who has present to his mind the geographical picture of Constantinople, will conceive and admire the greatness of the spectacle. The five christian ships continued to advance with joyful shouts, and a full press both of sails and oars, against an hostile fleet of three hundred vessels; and the rampart, the camp, the coasts of Europe and Asia, were lined with innumerable spectators, who anxiously awaited the event of this momentous succour. At the first view that event could not appear doubtful: the superiority of the Moslems was beyond all measure or account; and, in a calm, their numbers and valour must inevitably have prevailed. But their hasty and imperfect navy had been created, not by the genius of the people, but by the will of the sultan; in the height of their prosperity, the Turks have acknowledged, that if God had given them the earth, he had left the sea to the Infidels;* and a series of defeats, a rapid progress of decay, has established the truth of their modest confession. Except eighteen galleies of some force, the rest of their fleet consisted of open boats, rudely constructed and awkwardly managed, crowded with troops, and destitute of cannon; and since courage arises in a great measure from the consciousness of strength, the bravest of the janizaries might tremble on a new element. In the christian squadron, five stout and lofty ships were guided by skilful pilots, and manned with the veterans of Italy and Greece, long practised in the arts and perils of the sea. Their weight was directed to sink or scatter the weak obstacles that impeded their passage: their artillery swept the waters: their liquid fire was poured on the heads of their adversaries, who, with the design of boarding, presumed to approach them; and the winds and waves are always on the side of the ablest navigators. In this conflict, the imperial vessel, which had been almost overpowered, was rescued by the Genoese; but the Turks, in a distant and closer attack, were twice repulsed with considerable loss. Mahomet himself sat on horseback on the beach, to encourage their valour by his voice and presence, by the promise of reward, and by fear, more potent than the fear of the enemy. The passions of his soul, and even the gestures of his body,* seemed to imitate the actions of the combatants; and, as if he had been the lord of nature, he spurred his horse with a fearless and impotent effort into the sea. His loud reproaches, and the clamours of the camp, urged the Ottomans to a third attack, more fatal and bloody than the two former; and I must repeat, though I cannot credit, the evidence of Phranza, who affirms from their own mouth, that they lost above twelve thousand men in the slaughter of the day. They fled in disorder to the shores of Europe and Asia, while the christian squadron, triumphant and unhurt, steered along the Bosphorus, and securely anchored within the chain of the harbour. In the confidence of victory, they boasted that the whole Turkish power must have yielded to their arms; but the admiral, or captain bashaw, found some consolation for a painful wound in his eye, by representing that accident as the cause of his defeat. Balitha Oglı was a renegade of the race of the Bulgarian princes; his military character was tainted with the unpopular vice of avarice; and under the despotism of the prince or people, misfortune is a sufficient evidence of guilt. His rank and services were annihilated by the displeasure of Mahomet. In the royal presence, the captain bashaw was extended on the ground by four slaves, and received one hundred strokes with a golden rod: his death had been pronounced; and he adored the clemency of the sultan, who was satisfied with the milder punishment of confiscation and exile. The introduction of this supply revived the hopes of

<sup>1</sup> It is singular that the Greeks should not agree in the number of their illustrious vessels: the fleet of Thess, the fleet of Prænæ and Livornum, and the fleet of Chalcidensis, must be extended to the smaller, or confined to larger, size. Voltaire, in giving one of them ships to Frederic II, compounds the expenses of the East and West.

* To bold defiance, or rather in gross ignorance, of languages and geography; the Genoese Council directed them to Chios with a south, and walls them to Constantinople with a north, wind.

* The perpetual decay and weakness of the Turkish navy, may be observed in Bryant (State of the Ottoman Empire, p. 222-245); Thevenot (Voyages, p. 4, p. 222-242); and Todd (Memoirs, tom. III.) the last of whom is always subservient to amuse and amuse his reader.

* I must confess, that I have before my eyes the living picture which Thucydides (L. vii. c. 71) has drawn of the passions and gestures of the Athenians in a naval engagement in the great harbour of Syracuse.

CHAP.
LXVIII.

* According to the exaggeration or corrupt text of Ducas (c. 26), this golden bar was of the enormous and incredible weight of 300 three, or pounds. Boudland's reading of 300 drachms, or five pounds, is sufficient to excruciate the son of Mahomet, and bruise the back of his admiral.

CHAP. the Greeks, and accused the supineness of their LXVIII. Western allies. Amidst the deserts of Anatolia and the rocks of Palestine, the millions of the crusades had buried themselves in a voluntary and inevitable grave; but the situation of the imperial city was strong against her enemies, and accessible to her friends; and a rational and moderate armament of the maritime states might have saved the relics of the Roman name, and maintained a christian fortress in the heart of the Ottoman empire. Yet this was the sole and feeble attempt for the deliverance of Constantinople: the more distant powers were insensible of its danger; and the ambassador of Hungary, or at least of Huniades, resided in the Turkish camp, to remove the fears, and to direct the operations, of the sultan.*

Mahomet
 transports his navy over land.

It was difficult for the Greeks to penetrate the secret of the divan; yet the Greeks are persuaded, that a resistance, so obstinate and surprising, had fatigued the perseverance of Mahomet. He began to meditate a retreat, and the siege would have been speedily raised, if the ambition and jealousy of the second vizir had not opposed the perfidious advice of Calil Basha, who still maintained a secret correspondence with the Byzantine court. The reduction of the city appeared to be hopeless, unless a double attack could be made from the harbour as well as from the land; but the harbour

* Ducas, who continues himself (B) informed of the affairs of Hungary, assigns a motive of superstition, a fatal belief that Constantinople would be the tomb of the Turkish conquerors. See PATERA (B) II., c. 70; and Spandano.

was inaccessible; an impenetrable chain was now defended by eight large ships, more than twenty of a smaller size, with several galleys and sloops; and, instead of facing this barrier, the Turks might apprehend a naval sally, and a second encounter in the open sea. In this perplexity, the genius of Mahomet conceived and executed a plan of a bold and marvellous cast, of transporting by land his lighter vessels and military stores from the Bosphorus into the higher part of the harbour. The distance is about ten miles; the ground is uneven, and was overspread with thickets; and, as the road must be opened behind the suburb of Galata, their free passage or total destruction must depend on the option of the Genoese. But these selfish merchants were ambitious of the favour of being the last devoured; and the deficiency of art was supplied by the strength of obedient myriads. A level way was covered with a broad platform of strong and solid planks; and to render them more slippery and smooth, they were anointed with the fat of sheep and oxen. Fourscore light galleys and brigantines of fifty and thirty oars, were disembarked on the Bosphorus shore; arranged successively on rollers; and drawn forwards by the force of men and pulleys. Two guides or pilots were stationed at the helm, and the prow, of each vessel; the sails were unfurled to the winds; and the labour was cheered by song and acclamation. In the course of a single night, this Turkish fleet painfully climbed the hill, steered over the plain, and was launched from the declivity into the shallow waters of the harbour, far above the molestation of the deeper vessels of the Greeks. The real importance of this operation was magnified by the consternation and confidence which it inspired: but the notorious, unquestionable fact was displayed before the eyes, and is recorded by the pens of the two nations.<sup>a</sup> A similar stratagem had been repeatedly practised by the ancients: the Ottoman gallees (I must again repeat) should be considered as large boats: and, if we compare the magnitude and the distance, the obstacles and the means, the boasted miracle<sup>b</sup> has perhaps been equalled by the industry of our own times.<sup>c</sup> As soon as Mahomet had occupied the upper harbour with a fleet and army, he constructed, in the narrowest part, a bridge, or rather mole, of fifty cubits in breadth, and one hundred in length: it was formed of casks and hogsheds, joined with rafters linked with iron, and covered with a solid floor. On this floating battery, he planted one of his largest cannon, while the fouracore gallees, with troops <sup>a</sup> The unanimous testimony of the four Greeks is confirmed by Cambray (p. 96), from the Turkish annals: but I would wish to correct the distance of six miles, and to prolong the term of one night.

<sup>b</sup> Pline relates two examples of a similar transportation over the six miles of the column of Corinth: the one fabulous, of Augustus after the battle of Actium; the other true, of Nearchus, a Greek general in the third century. To these he might have added a bold enterprise of Hamoud, an Arabian sea-robber, from the harbour of Tyrentum (Ptolema, l. viii. p. 116. edit. Gronov.)

<sup>c</sup> A Greek of Canffa, who had served the Venetians in a similar undertaking (Spand. s. s. 1428, No. 37), might possibly be the adviser and agent of Mahomet.

<sup>d</sup> I particularly allude to our own embarkations on the lakes of Canada in the years 1776 and 1777. so great in the labour, so fruitless in the event.

and scaling-ladders, approached the most accessible side, which had formerly been stormed by the Latin conquerors. The indolence of the christians has been accused for not destroying these unfinished works; but their fire, by a superior fire, was controlled and silenced; nor were they wanting in a nocturnal attempt to burn the vessels as well as the bridge of the sultan. His vigilance prevented their approach; the foremost galliots were sunk or taken: forty youths, the bravest of Italy and Greece, were inhumanly massacred at his command; nor could the emperor's grief be assuaged by the just though cruel retaliation, of exposing from the walls the heads of two hundred and sixty mussulman captives. After a siege of Duration of the city. forty days, the fate of Constantinople could no longer be averted. The diminutive garrison was exhausted by a double attack; the fortifications, which had stood for ages against hostile violence, were dismantled on all sides by the Ottoman cannon; many breaches were opened; and near the gate of St. Romans, four towers had been levelled with the ground. For the payment of his feeble and mutinous troops, Constantine was compelled to despoil the churches, with the promise of a fourfold restitution; and his sacrilege offered a new reproach to the enemies of the union. A spirit of discord impaired the remnant of the christian strength; the Genoese and Venetian auxiliaries asserted the pre-eminence of their respective service; and Justiniani and the great duke, whose ambition was not extinguished by the common danger, accused each other of treachery and cowardice.

CHAP.
LXVIII.

Preparations of the Turks for the general assault.
May 26.

During the siege of Constantinople, the words of peace and capitulation had been sometimes pronounced; and several embassies had passed between the camp and the city.<sup>1</sup> The Greek emperor was humbled by adversity; and would have yielded to any terms compatible with religion and royalty. The Turkish sultan was desirous of sparing the blood of his soldiers; still more desirous of securing for his own use the Byzantine treasures; and he accomplished a sacred duty in presenting to the gabaurs, the choice of circumcision, of tribute, or of death. The avarice of Mahomet might have been satisfied with an annual sum of one hundred thousand ducats; but his ambition grasped the capital of the East: to the prince he offered a rich equivalent, to the people a free toleration, or a safe departure; but after some fruitless treaty, he declared his resolution of finding either a throne, or a grave, under the walls of Constantinople. A sense of honour, and the fear of universal reproach, forbade Palaeologus to resign the city into the hands of the Ottomans; and he determined to abide the last extremities of war. Several days were employed by the sultan in the preparations of the assault; and a respite was granted by his favourite science of astrology, which had fixed on the twenty-ninth of May, as the fortunate and fatal hour. On the evening of the twenty-seventh, he issued his final orders; assembled in his presence the military chiefs; and dispersed his heralds through the camp to proclaim the duty, and the motives, of the perilous enterprise. Fear is the first principle of a despotic government; and his menaces were expressed in the Oriental style, that the fugitives and deserters, had they the wings of a bird,* should not escape from his inexorable justice. The greatest part of his bashaws and janizaries were the offspring of christian parents; but the glories of the Turkish name were perpetuated by successive adoption; and in the gradual change of individuals, the spirit of a legion, a regiment, or an oda, is kept alive by imitation and discipline. In this holy warfare, the Moslems were exhorted to purify their minds with prayer, their bodies with seven ablutions; and to abstain from food till the close of the ensuing day. A crowd of dervishes visited the tents,

<sup>1</sup> Chalcoconylus and Ducas differ in the time and circumstances of the negotiation; and as it was neither glorious nor salutary, the Sultan of Phœnicia spurs his prince even the thought of a surrender.

CHAP.
LXVIII

* These wings (Chalcedondytes, l. xii, p. 298) are no more than an Oriental figure; but in the tragedy of Icare, Mithras's passion sends above seas and regions:

Should the brave youth, open his frozen wings,

Bear him aloft above the wandering clouds,

And seat him in the Pleiad's golden chariot—

Thence should my legs drag him down to perdition.

Besides the extravagance of the rant, I must observe, 1. That the operation of the wind must be confined to the lower regions of the air. 2. That the name, arrangement, and the date of the Pleiads are purely Greek (Scholiast ad Homer, l. 696. Eupolis in Ionia, p. 300. Apollodorus, l. iii, c. 10. Helios, p. 229, Not. 987), and had no affinity with the astronomy of the East (Hydrab. Ulughbeg. Tabul. in Syngema 2d. edit. tom. i, p. 40, 42. Gagnier, Origine des Arts, &c. tom. vi, p. 73-75. Gosselin, Hist. du Calendrier, p. 77), which Mahomet had evaded. 3. The golden chariot does not exist either in science or fiction; but I much fear that Dr. Johnson has confounded the Pleiads with the great bear or waggon, the rodac with a northern equitation.

Αἰὲτος Πτερυγὸς ὁμοῖον τροχῶν τε καὶ ἄστρων.

CHAP.
LXVIII.

to instil the desire of martyrdom, and the assurance of spending an immortal youth amidst the rivers and gardens of paradise, and in the embraces of the black-eyed virgins. Yet Mahomet principally trusted to the efficacy of temporal and visible rewards. A double pay was promised to the victorious troops; "The city and the buildings," said Mahomet, "are mine; but I resign to your valour the captives and the spoil, the treasures of gold and beauty; be rich and be happy. Many are the provinces of my empire: the intrepid soldier who first ascends the walls of Constantinople, shall be rewarded with the government of the fairest and most wealthy; and my gratitude shall accumulate his honours and fortunes above the measure of his own hopes." Such various and potent motives diffused among the Turks a general ardour, regardless of life, and impatient for action: the camp re-echoed with the Moslem shouts of "God is God, there is but one God, and Mahomet is the apostle of God;" and the sea and land, from Galata to the seven towers, were illuminated by the blaze of their nocturnal fires.

Last fore-
well of the emperor and the Greek.

Far different was the state of the christians; who, with loud and impotent complaints, deplored the guilt, or the punishment, of their sins. The celestial image of the virgin had been exposed in solemn procession; but their divine patroness was deaf to their intreaties: they accused the obstinacy of the emperor for refusing a timely surrender; anticipated the horrors of their fate; and sighed for the repose and security of Turkish servitude. The noblest of the Greeks, and the bravest of the allies, were summoned to the palace, to prepare them, on the evening of the twenty-eighth, for the duties and dangers of the general assault. The last speech of Palaeologus was the funeral oration of the Roman empire: he promised, he conjured, and he vainly attempted to infuse the hope which was extinguished in his own mind. In this world all was comfortless and gloomy; and neither the gospel nor the church have proposed any conspicuous recompense to the heroes who fall in the service of their country. But the example of their prince, and the confinement of a siege, had armed these warriors with the courage of despair; and the pathetic scene is described by the feelings of the historian Phranzes, who was himself present at this mournful assembly. They wept, they embraced; regardless of their families and fortunes, they devoted their lives; and each commander, departing to his station, maintained all night a vigilant and anxious watch on the rampart. The emperor, and some faithful companions, entered the dome of St. Sophia, which in a few hours was to be converted into a mosch, and devoutly received, with tears and prayers, the sacrament of the holy communion. He reposed some moments in the palace,

<sup>b</sup> Flavours quarrels with these Moslem exclamations, not for the name of God, but for that of the prophet: the poem and of Voltaire is extensive and even ridiculous.

* I am afraid that this discourse was composed by Phranzes himself; and it would be greatly to the honour and the advantage, that I almost doubt whether it was pronounced by Constantine. Lequandus assigns him another speech, in which he addresses himself more especially to the Latin auxiliaries.

CHAP.
LXVIII.

which resounded with cries and lamentations; solicited the pardon of all whom he might have injured;<sup>1</sup> and mounted on horseback to visit the guards, and explore the motions of the enemy. The distress and fall of the last Constantine are more glorious than the long prosperity of the Byzantine Cæsars.

The general assault,
May 28.

In the confusion of darkness, an assailant may sometimes succeed; but in this great and general attack, the military judgment and astrological knowledge of Mahomet advised him to expect the morning, the memorable twenty-ninth of May, in the fourteen hundred and fifty-third year of the christian era. The preceding night had been strenuously employed: the troops, the cannon, and the fascines, were advanced to the edge of the ditch, which in many parts presented a smooth and level passage to the breach; and his fourscore gallees almost touched with the prows and their scaling ladders the less defensible walls of the harbour. Under pain of death, silence was enjoined: but the physical laws of motion and sound are not obedient to discipline or fear; each individual might suppress his voice and measure his footsteps; but the march and labour of thousands must inevitably produce a strange confusion of dissonant clamours, which reached the ears of the watchmen of the towers. At day-break, without the customary signal of the morning gun, the Turks assaulted the city by sea and land; and the similitude of a twined or twisted thread has been applied to the closeness and continuity of their line of attack.<sup>1</sup> The foremost ranks consisted of the refuse of the host, a voluntary crowd, who fought without order or command; of the feebleness of age or childhood, of peasants and vagrants, and of all who had joined the camp in the blind hope of plunder and martyrdom. The common impulse drove them onwards to the wall: the most audacious to climb were instantly precipitated; and not a dart, not a bullet, of the christians was fully wasted on the accumulated throng. But their strength and ammunition were exhausted in this laborious defence; the ditch was filled with the bodies of the slain; they supported the footsteps of their companions; and of this devoted vanguard, the death was more serviceable than the life. Under their respective bashaws and sanjaks, the troops of Anatolia and Rumania were successively led to the charge; their progress was various and doubtful; but, after a conflict of two hours, the Greeks still maintained and improved their advantage; and the voice of the emperor was heard, encouraging his soldiers to achieve, by a last effort, the deliverance of their country. In that fatal moment, the janizaries arose, fresh, vigorous, and invincible. The sultan himself on horseback, with an iron mace in his hand, was the spectator and judge of their valour: he was surrounded by ten thousand of his domestic troops, whom he reserved for the <sup>1</sup> Besides the 16,000 gendres, and the palace and the marines, Ducaz numbers in this general assault 150,000 Turks, both horse and foot.

<sup>1</sup> This abasement, which devotion has sometimes extorted from dying princes, is an improvement of the gospel doctrine of the forgiveness of injuries: it is more easy to forgive 100 times, than strict to ask pardon of an inferior.

CHAP.
LXVIII,
.....

decisive occasions; and the tide of battle was directed and impelled by his voice and eye. His numerous ministers of justice were posted behind the line, to urge, to restrain, and to punish; and if danger was in the front, shame and inevitable death were in the rear, of the fugitives. The cries of fear and of pain were drowned in the martial music of drums, trumpets, and attaballs; and experience has proved, that the mechanical operation of sounds, by quickening the circulation of the blood and spirits, will act on the human machine more forcibly than the eloquence of reason and honour. From the lines, the galleys, and the bridge, the Ottoman artillery thundered on all sides; and the camp and city, the Greeks and the Turks, were involved in a cloud of smoke, which could only be dispelled by the final deliverance or destruction of the Roman empire. The single combats of the heroes of history or fable amuse our fancy and engage our affections; the skillful evolutions of war may inform the mind, and improve a necessary, though pernicious, science; but in the uniform and odious pictures of a general assault, all is blood, and horror, and confusion: nor shall I strive, at the distance of three centuries and a thousand miles, to delineate a scene of which there could be no spectators, and of which the actors themselves were incapable of forming any just or adequate idea.

The immediate loss of Constantinople may be ascribed to the bullet, or arrow, which pierced the gauntlet of John Justiniani. The sight of his blood, and the exquisite pain, appalled the courage of the chief, whose arms and counsels were the firmest rampart of the city. As he withdrew from his station in quest of a surgeon, his flight was perceived and stopped by the indefatigable emperor. "Your wound," exclaimed Palæologus, "is slight; the danger is pressing; your presence is necessary; and whither will you retire?" "I will retire," said the trembling Genoese, by "the same road which God has opened to the "Turks;" and at these words he hastily passed through one of the breaches of the inner wall. By this pusillanimous act, he stained the honour of a military life; and the few days which he survived in Galata, or the isle of Chios, were embittered by his own and the public reproach.* His example was imitated by the greatest part of the Latin auxillaries; and the defence began to slacken when the attack was pressed with redoubled vigour. The number of the Ottomans was fifty, perhaps an hundred, times superior to that of the christians; the double walls were reduced by the cannon to an heap of ruins: in a circuit of several miles, some places must be found more easy of access, or more feebly guarded; and if the besiegers could penetrate in a single point, the whole city was irrecoverably lost. The first

* In the severe censure of the flight of Justinian, Phocas expressed his own feelings, and those of the public. For more personal reasons, he is treated with more lenity and respect by Duca; but the words of Laurentius Chironis express his strong and correct indignation, gloria scilicet major diffamia. In the whole series of their Eastern policy, the mountebanks, the Genoese, were always suspected, and often guilty.

CHAP.
LXVIII.

who deserved the sultan's reward was Hassan the janizary, of gigantic stature and strength. With his scymetar in one hand and his buckler in the other, he ascended the outward fortification: of the thirty janizaries, who were emulous of his valour, eighteen perished in the bold adventure; Hassan and his twelve companions had reached the summit: the giant was precipitated from the rampart; he rose on one knee, and was again oppressed by a shower of darts and stones. But his success had proved that the achievement was possible: the walls and towers were instantly covered with a swarm of Turks; and the Greeks, now driven from the vantage ground, were overwhelmed by increasing multitudes. Amidst these multitudes, the emperor,* who accomplished all the duties of a general and a soldier, was long seen, and finally lost. The nobles, who fought round his person, sustained, till their last breath, the honourable names of Palæologus and Cantacuzene: his mournful exclamation was heard, "Canst there be found a christian to cut off my head?" and his last fear was that of fall-

* Doria kills him with two blows of Turkish soldiers: Chalcidius strikes wounds him in the shoulder, and then tramples him in the groin. The grief of Rhodius crying him during the treaty, escapes from the prison image of his death: but we may, without history, apply these words from Ædipus.

As to Scyllias, let them search the field;
And where they find a victim of the shade,
Lead me to stand, and holding down my hand,
There they will find him at his ready length;
With his face up to heaven, in that red moment
When his good sword had stopped.

* Spenser's id. v. 1432, No. 10, who had hopes of his salvation, wishes to glorify his demand from the guilt of suicide.

ing alive into the hands of the infidels.<sup>3</sup> The CHAP. prudent despair of Constantine cut away the LXVIII. purple: amidst the tumult he fell by an unknown Death of the emperor the Con- land, and his body was buried under a mountain stantine of the slain. After his death, resistance and order Palatino were no more: the Greeks fled towards the city 1 gen. and many were pressed and stifled in the narrow pass of the gate of St. Romulus. The victorious Turks rushed through the breaches of the inner wall; and as they advanced into the streets, they were soon joined by their brethren, who had forced the gate Phenar on the side of the harbour.<sup>4</sup> In the first heat of their pursuit, about two thousand christians were put to the sword; but avarice soon prevailed over cruelty: and the victors acknowledged, that they should immediately have given quarter, if the valour of the emperor and his chosen hands had not prepared them for a similar opposition in every part of the capital. It was thus, after a siege of fifty-three days, that Con- Loss of the stantinople, which had defied the power of Chos- city and roes, the Chagan, and the caliphs, was irretrievably subdued by the arms of Mahomet the second. Her empire only had been subverted by the Latins; her religion was trampled in the dust by the Moslem conquerors.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>3</sup> Leonardus Chilensis very properly observes, that the Turks, had they known the emperor, would have admitted to save and secure a capital so acceptable to the sultan.

<sup>4</sup> Grotius, p. 58. The christian ships in the mouth of the harbour had landed and retarded this mortal attack.

<sup>5</sup> Chalcovnedes most obviously supposes that Constantinople was sacked by the Asiatics, in revenge for the ancient calamities of Troy; and the grammarians of the fifteenth century are happy to melt down the thorough appellation of Turks, into the more classic name of Troes.

CHAP.
LXVIII.

The Turks
enter and pillage Constanti-
nople.

The tidings of misfortune fly with a rapid wing; yet such was the extent of Constantinople, that the more distant quarters might prolong some moments the happy ignorance of their ruin.* But in the general consternation, in the feelings of selfish or social anxiety, in the tumult and thunder of the assault, a sleepless night and morning must have elapsed: nor can I believe that many Grecian ladies were awakened by the janizaries from a sound and tranquil slumber. On the assurance of the public calamity, the houses and convents were instantly deserted; and the trembling inhabitants flocked together in the streets, like an herd of timid animals, as if accumulated weakness could be productive of strength, or in the vain hope, that amid the crowd, each individual might be safe and invisible. From every part of the capital they flowed into the church of St. Sophia; in the space of an hour, the sanctuary, the choir, the nave, the upper and lower galleries, were filled with the multitude of fathers and husbands, of women and children, of priests, monks, and religious virgins: the doors were barred on the inside, and they sought protection from the sacred dome, which they had so lately abhorred as a profane and polluted edifice. Their confidence was founded on the prophecy of an enthusiast or impostor, that one day the Turks would enter Con-

* When Cyrus captured Babylon during the celebration of a festival, so vast was the city, and so careless were the inhabitants, that much time elapsed before the distant quarters knew that they were captured (Herodotus, l. i. c. 191), and Usher (Annals, p. 76), who has quoted from the prophet Jeremiah a passage of similar import.

stantinople, and pursue the Romans as far as the column of Constantine in the square before St. Sophia; but that this would be the term of their calamities; that an angel would descend from heaven, with a sword in his hand, and would deliver the empire, with that celestial weapon, to a poor man seated at the foot of the column. "Take this sword," would he say, "and avenge the people of the Lord." At these animating words, the Turks would instantly fly, and the victorious Romans would drive them from the West, and from all Anatolia, as far as the frontiers of Persia. It is on this occasion, that Ducas, with some fancy and much truth, upbraids the discord and obstinacy of the Greeks. "Had that angel appeared," exclaims the historian, "had he offered to exterminate your foes if you would consent to the union of the church, even then, in that fatal moment, you would have rejected your safety, or have deceived your God."

While they expected the descent of the tardy angel, the doors were broken with axes; and as the Turks encountered no resistance, their bloodless hands were employed in selecting and securing the multitude of their prisoners. Youth, beauty, and the appearance of wealth, attracted their choice; and the right of property was de-

Captivity of
the Greeks.

* This lively description is extracted from Ducas (c. 39), who, two years afterwards, was sent ambassador from the prince of London to the sultan (c. 44). Till London was sold in 1460 (Piermon, L. III, c. 27), that island must have been full of the fugitives of Constantinople, who delighted to repeat, perhaps to whom, the tale of their misery.

CHAP.
LXVIII.

cided among themselves by a prior seizure, by personal strength, and by the authority of command. In the space of an hour, the male captives were bound with cords, the females with their veils and girdles. The senators were linked with their slaves; the prelates, with the porters of the church; and young men of a plebeian class, with noble maids, whose faces had been invisible to the sun and their nearest kindred. In this common captivity, the ranks of society were confounded; the ties of nature were cut asunder; and the inexorable soldier was careless of the father's groans, the tears of the mother, and the lamentations of the children. The loudest in their wailings were the nuns, who were torn from the altar with naked bosoms, outstretched hands, and dishevelled hair; and we should piously believe, that few could be tempted to prefer the vigils of the haram to those of the monastery. Of these unfortunate Greeks, of these domestic animals, whole strings were rudely driven through the streets; and as the conquerors were eager to return for more prey, their trembling pace was quickened with menaces and blows. At the same hour, a similar rapine was exercised in all the churches and monasteries, in all the palaces and habitations of the capital; nor could any palace, however sacred or sequestered, protect the persons or the property of the Greeks. Above sixty thousand of this devoted people were transported from the city to the camp and fleet; exchanged or sold, according to the caprice or interest of their masters, and dispersed in remote servitude through the provinces of the Ottoman empire. Among these we may notice some remarkable characters. The historian Phranza, first chamberlain and principal secretary, was involved, with his family, in the common lot. After suffering, four months, the hardships of slavery, he recovered his freedom; in the ensuing winter he ventured to Adrianople, and ransomed his wife from the mir bashi, or master of horse; but his two children, in the flower of youth and beauty, had been seized for the use of Mahomet himself. The daughter of Phranza died in the scraglio, perhaps a virgin; his son, in the fifteenth year of his age, preferred death to infamy, and was stabbed by the hand of the royal lover.<sup>a</sup> A deed thus inhuman cannot surely be expiated by the taste and liberality with which he released a Grecian matron and her two daughters, on receiving a Latin ode from Philadelphus, who had chosen a wife in that noble family.<sup>b</sup> The pride or cruelty of Mahomet would have been most sensibly gratified by the capture of a Roman legate; but the dexterity of cardinal Isidore eluded the search, and he escaped from Galata in a plebeian habit.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>a</sup> See Phranza, l. III. p. 20, 21. His expressions are positive: Amoris sui nuntii jugaliter . . . voluerunt cum eo torpore et seculi silentio. Me miserum et infelicem. Yet he could only learn from report, the bloody or impure scenes that were acted in the dark recesses of the seraglio.

<sup>b</sup> See Tischendorf (Ann. *l. p. l. p. 290) and Lancelotti (Mém. de l'Académie des Inscriptions, tom. 2. p. 115). I should be curious to know how he could prefer the public enemy, whom he so often reviles, to the most corrupt and infamous of tyrants.

<sup>c</sup> The Commençement of Pius it is supposed that he craftily placed his cardinal's hat on the head of a corpse, which was cut off and exposed in triumph, while the legate himself was bought and delivered.

HAT.
LXVIII

The chain and entrance of the outward harbour was still occupied by the Italian ships of merchandise and war. They had signalled their valour in the siege: they embraced the moment of retreat, while the Turkish mariners were dissipated in the pillage of the city. When they hoisted sail, the beach was covered with a suppliant and lamentable crowd; but the means of transportation were scanty: the Venetians and Genoese selected their countrymen; and, notwithstanding the fairest promises of the sultan, the inhabitants of Galata evacuated their houses, and embarked with their most precious effects.

Amount of the spoil.

In the fall and the sack of great cities, an historian is condemned to repeat the tale of uniform calamity: the same effects must be produced by the same passions; and when those passions may be indulged without controul, small, alas! is the difference between civilised and savage man. Amidst the vague exclamations of bigotry and hatred, the Turks are not accused of a wanton or immoderate effusion of christian blood; but, according to their maxims (the maxims of antiquity), the lives of the vanquished were forfeited; and the legitimate reward of the conqueror was derived from the service, the sale, or the ransom, of his captives of both sexes.* The

as a sequel of no value. The great Belgic Chronicle adds his escape with new adventures, which he suppressed (says Spandanus, s. n. 1431, No. 13) in his own letters, lest he should lose the merit and reward of suffering for Christ.

* Barbarous expectations, with pleasure and applause, on the rights of war, and the use of slaves; among the ancients and the Turks see Legat. Turc., epist. III, p. 161.

CHAP.
LXVIII.
~~~~~

wealth of Constantinople had been granted by the sultan to his victorious troops; and the rapine of an hour is more productive than the industry of years. But as no regular division was attempted of the spoil, the respective shares were not determined by merit; and the rewards of valour were stolen away by the followers of the camp, who had declined the toil and danger of the battle. The narrative of their depredations could not afford either amusement or instruction; the total amount, in the last poverty of the empire, has been valued at four millions of ducats;* and of this sum a small part was the property of the Venetians, the Genoese, the Florentines, and the merchants of Ancona. Of these foreigners, the stock was improved in quick and perpetual circulation; but the riches of the Greeks were displayed in the idle ostentation of palaces and wardrobes, or deeply buried in treasures of ingots and old coin, lest it should be demanded at their hands for the defence of their country. The profanation and plunder of the monasteries and churches excited the most tragic complaints. The dome of St. Sophia itself, the earthly heaven, the second firmament, the vehicle of the cherubim, the throne of the glory of God,<sup>b</sup> was despoiled of the oblations of ages; and the gold and silver, the

* This sum is specified in a marginal note of Leunclavius (Croniconum, Lviij, p. 211); but, in the distribution to Venice, Genoa, Florence, and Ancona, of 20, 20, 20, and 15,000 ducats, I suspect that a figure has been dropped. Even with the restitution, the foreign property would scarcely exceed one-fourth.

<sup>b</sup> See the enthusiastic praises and lamentations of Ptolemy (l. vi. c. 17).

CHAP.
LXVIII.

pearls and jewels, the vases and sacerdotal ornaments, were most wickedly converted to the service of mankind. After the divine images had been stripped of all that could be valuable to a profane eye, the canvas, or the wood, was torn, or broken, or burnt, or trod under foot, or applied, in the stables, or the kitchen, to the vilest uses. The example of sacrilege was imitated, however, from the Latin conquerors of Constantinople; and the treatment which Christ, the virgin, and the saints, had sustained from the guilty catholic might be inflicted by the zealous musliman on the monuments of idolatry. Perhaps, instead of joining the public clamour, a philosopher will observe, that in the decline of the arts, the workmanship could not be more valuable than the work, and that a fresh supply of visions and miracles would speedily be renewed by the craft of the priest and the credulity of the people. He will more seriously deplore the loss of the Byzantine libraries, which were destroyed or scattered in the general confusion; one hundred and twenty thousand manuscripts are said to have disappeared; ten volumes might be purchased for a single ducat; and the same ignominious price, too high perhaps for a shelf of theology, included the whole works of Aristotle and Homer, the noblest productions of the science and literature of ancient Greece. We may reflect, with pleasure, that an inestimable portion of our classic treasures was safely deposited in Italy; and that the mechanics of a German town had invented an art which derides the havoc of time and barbarism.

→ See Ducas p. 43, and an épître, July 13th, 1453, from Laurent Quinquas to pope Nicholas v. (History de Grèce, p. 194, from a MS. in the Vatican library).

From the first hour<sup>a</sup> of the memorable twenty-ninth of May, disorder and rapine prevailed in Constantinople, till the eighth hour of the same day: when the sultan himself passed in triumph through the gate of St. Romanus. He was attended by his viziers, bashaws, and guards, each of whom (says a Byzantine historian) was robust as Hercules, dextrous as Apollo, and equal in battle to any ten of the race of ordinary mortals. The conqueror<sup>1</sup> gazed with satisfaction and wonder on the strange, though splendid, appearance of the domes and palaces, so dissimilar from the style of Oriental architecture. In the hippodrome, or atmeidan, his eye was attracted by the twisted column of the three serpents; and, as a trial of his strength, he shattered with his iron mace, or battle-axe, the under-jaw of one of these monsters,<sup>2</sup> which, in the eye of the Turks, were the idols or talismans of the city. At the principal door of St. Sophia, he alighted from his horse, and entered the dome; and such was his jealous regard for that monument of his glory, that on observing a zealous musalman

CHAP.
LXVIII.

Mohamet
is within the city, St.
Sophia, the palace, &c.

<sup>a</sup> The Julian calendar, which reckons the days and hours from midnight, was used at Constantinople. But Duca seems to understand the natural hours from sunrise.

<sup>1</sup> See the Turkish Annals, p. 329, and the Pantheon of Louis-le-Grand, p. 145.

<sup>2</sup> I have had occasion (Vol. II., p. 27) to mention the curious story of Croesus's obolus.

CHAP.
LXVIII.

in the act of breaking the marble pavement, he admonished him with his scymetar, that, if the spoil and captives were granted to the soldiers, the public and private buildings had been reserved for the prince. By his command the metropolis of the Eastern church was transformed into a mosch: the rich and portable instruments of superstition had been removed; the crosses were thrown down; and the walls, which were covered with images and mosaics, were washed and purified, and restored to a state of naked simplicity. On the same day, or on the ensuing Friday, the mucîm, or crier, ascended the most lofty turret, and proclaimed the exon, or public invitation in the name of God and his prophet; the imam preached; and Mahomet the second performed the namaz of prayer and thanksgiving on the great altar, where the christian mysteries had so lately been celebrated before the last of the Cæsars*. From St. Sophia he proceeded to the august, but desolate, mansion of an hundred successors of the great Constantine, but which, in a few hours, had been stripped of the pomp of royalty. A melancholy reflection on the vicissitudes of human greatness forced itself on his mind; and he repeated an elegant distich of Persian poetry: "The spider has
"wove his web in the imperial palace; and the

* We are obliged to Cantemir (p. 102) for the Turkish account of the conversion of St. Sophia, as bitterly deplored by Ptolemy and Diodorus. It is amusing enough to observe, in what opposite lights the same object appears to a musalman and a christian eye.

"owl hath sung her watch-song on the towers of CHAP.
"Afrasiab."<sup>10</sup> LXVIII.

Yet his mind was not satisfied, nor did the victory seem complete, till he was informed of the fate of Constantine; whether he had escaped, or been made prisoner, or had fallen in the battle. Two janizaries claimed the honour and reward of his death: the body, under an heap of slain, was discovered by the golden eagles embroidered on his shoes: the Greeks acknowledged with tears the head of their late emperor; and, after exposing the bloody trophy,<sup>1</sup> Mahomet bestowed on his rival the honours of a decent funeral. After his decease, Lucas Notaras, great duke,<sup>2</sup> and first minister of the empire, was the most important prisoner. When he offered his person and his treasures at the foot of the throne, "And why," said the indignant sultan, "did you not employ these treasures in the defence of your prince and country?" "They were yours," answered the slave, "God had reserved them for your hands." "If he reserved them for me," replied the despot, "how have you presumed to

His behaviour to the Greeks.

<sup>10</sup> This distich, which Constantine gives in the original, deserves now besides from the application. It was then that Selim repeated, in the sack of Carthage, the famous prophecy of Homer. The same generous feeling carried the mind of the conqueror to the past or the future.

<sup>1</sup> I cannot believe with Ducas (see Spandanus, s. n. 1443, No. 13), that Mahomet sent round Preda, Ardas, &c. the head of the Greek emperor: he would surely content himself with a trophy less important.

<sup>2</sup> Phrasar was the personal enemy of the great duke; nor could time, or death, or his own retreat to a monastery, extort a feeling of sympathy or forgiveness. Ducas is inclined to praise and pity the martyr; Chalcocondyles is sadder, but we are indebted to him for the hint of the Greek conspiracy.

CHAP.
LXVIII.
*****

cally named by the Italians) appears to reign over Europe and Asia; but his person on the shores of the Bosphorus may not always be secure from the insults of an hostile navy. In the new character of a mosch, the cathedral of St. Sophia was endowed with an ample revenue, crowned with lofty minarets, and surrounded with groves and fountains, for the devotion and refreshment of the Moslems. The same model was imitated in the jami or royal moscha; and the first of these was built by Mahomet himself, on the ruins of the church of the holy apostles and the tombs of the Greek emperors. On the third day after the conquest, the grave of Abu Ayub, or Joh, who had fallen in the first siege of the Arabs, was revealed in a vision; and it is before the sepulchre of the martyr that the new sultans are girded with the sword of empire.* Constantinople no longer appertains to the Roman historian; nor shall I enumerate the civil and religious edifices that were profaned or erected by its Turkish masters: the population was speedily renewed; and before the end of September, five thousand families of Anatolia and Romania had obeyed the royal mandate, which enjoined them, under pain of death, to occupy their new habitations in the capital. The throne of Mahomet was guarded by the numbers and fidelity of his Moslem subjects; but his rational policy aspired to collect the remnant of the Greeks; and they returned in crowds as soon as they were assured of their lives, their liberties, and the free exercise of their religion. In the election and investiture of a patriarch, the ceremonial of the Byzantine court was revived and imitated. With a mixture of satisfaction and horror, they beheld the sultan on his throne; who delivered into the hands of Genadius the crosier or pastoral staff, the symbol of his ecclesiastical office; who conducted the patriarch to the gate of the seraglio, presented him with an horse richly caparisoned, and directed the vizirs and hashaws to lead him to the palace which had been allotted for his residence.* The churches of Constantinople were shared between the two religions: their limits were marked; and, till it was infringed by Selim, the grandson of Mahomet, the Greeks* enjoyed above sixty years the benefit of this equal partition. Encouraged by the ministers of the divan, who wished to elude the fanaticism of the sultan, the christian advocates presumed to allege that this division had been an act, not of generosity, but of justice;

* The Turbe, or sepulchral monument of Abu Ayub, is described and engraved in the Talieu Général de l'Empire Ottoman (Paris, 1767, in large folio), a work of less war, perhaps, than magnificence (tom. 3, p. 305, 306).

* Pleruma (L. iii, c. 19) relates the ceremony, which has possibly been altered in the Greek reports to each other, and to the Latins. The fact is confirmed by Emanuel Melaxas, who wrote, in vulgar Greek, the history of the jurisdiction after the taking of Constantinople, inserted in the Turco-Græcia of Crusius (p. v, p. 106-164). But the most patient reader will not believe that Mahomet adopted the Catholic form, "Sancta Trinitas que mihi donavit imperium tu in pacem relictum novæ Ræmæ deligisti."

* From the Turco-Græcia of Crusius, &c. Spaldanus (L. ii. 1463, No. 21, 1456, No. 16) describes the slavery and domestic quarrels of the Greek church. The patriarch who succeeded Genadius threw himself in despair into a well.

CHAP.
LXVIII.
-----

not a concession, but a compact; and that if one half of the city had been taken by storm, the other moiety had surrendered on the faith of a sacred capitulation. The original grant had indeed been consumed by fire; but the loss was supplied by the testimony of three aged janizaries who remembered the transaction; and their venal oaths are of more weight in the opinion of Cantemir, than the positive and unanimous consent of the history of the times.<sup>2</sup>

Extinction of the imperial families of Con-stantin and Palaeologus.

The remaining fragments of the Greek kingdom in Europe and Asia I shall abandon to the Turkish arms: but the final extinction of the two last dynasties<sup>3</sup> which have reigned in Constantinople, should terminate the decline and fall of the Roman empire in the East. The despots of the Morea, Demetrius and Thomas,<sup>4</sup> the two surviving brothers of the name of Palaeologus, <sup>2</sup> Cantemir (p. 104-105) insists on the unanimous consent of the Turkish historians, ancient as well as modern, and argues, that they would not have violated the truth to diminish their national glory, since it is esteemed more honourable to take a city by force than by composition. But, 1. I doubt this consent, since he quotes no particular historian; and the Turkish annals of Leucoclavius affirm, without exception, that Mahomet took Constantinople per vim (p. 329). 2. The same argument may be turned in favour of the Greeks of the times, who could not have forgotten this ignominious and salutary treaty. Voltaire, as usual, perfices the Turks to the ridiculous.

<sup>3</sup> For the genealogy and fall of the Comneni of Trebizond see Du Roi (Fœd. Byzant. p. 193); for the last Palaeologi, the same accurate antiquarian (p. 244, 247, 348). The Palaeologi of Munifera were not extinct till the next century; but they had forgotten their Greek origin and kindred.

<sup>4</sup> In the worthless story of the disputes and misfortunes of the two brothers, Phranza (l. iii. c. 21-29) is too partial on the side of Thomas; Ducas (c. 44, 45) is too brief, and Chalcocomydes (l. viii. c. 1) too diffuse and digressive.

were astonished by the death of the emperor Constantine, and the ruin of the monarchy. Hopeless of defence, they prepared, with the noble Greeks who adhered to their fortune, to seek a refuge in Italy, beyond the reach of the Ottoman thunder. Their first apprehensions were dispelled by the victorious sultan, who contented himself with a tribute of twelve thousand ducats; and while his ambition explored the continent and the islands in search of prey, he indulged the Morea in a respite of seven years. But this respite was a period of grief, discord, and misery. The hexamilion, the rampart of the isthmus, so often raised and so often subverted, could not long be defended by three hundred Italian archers; the keys of Corinth were seized by the Turks; they returned from their summer excursions with a train of captives and spoil; and the complaints of the injured Greeks were heard with indifference and disdain. The Albanians, a vagrant tribe of shepherds and robbers, filled the peninsula with rapine and murder; the two despots implored the dangerous and humiliating aid of a neighbouring bashaw; and when he had quelled the revolt, his lessons inculcated the rule of their future conduct. Neither the ties of blood, nor the oaths which they repeatedly pledged in the communion and before the altar, nor the stronger pressure of necessity, could reconcile or suspend their domestic quarrels. They ravaged each other's patrimony with fire and sword: the alms and succours of the West were consumed in civil hostility; and their power was only exerted in savage and arbitrary execu-

CHAP.
LXVIII.Loss of the Morea,
p. 1140.

tions. The distress and revenge of the weaker rival invoked their supreme lord; and, in the season of maturity and revenge, Mahomet declared himself the friend of Demetrius, and marched into the Morea with an irresistible force. When he had taken possession of Sparta, "You are too weak," said the sultan, "to control this turbulent province: I will take your daughter to my bed; and you shall pass the remainder of your life in security and honour." Demetrius sighed and obeyed; surrendered his daughter and his castles; followed to Adrianople his sovereign and son; and received for his own maintenance, and that of his followers, a city in Thrace, and the adjacent isles of Imbros, Lemnos, and Samothrace. He was joined the next year by a companion of misfortune, the last of the Comnenian race, who, after the taking of Constantinople by the Latins, had founded a new empire on the coast of the Black sea.<sup>1</sup> In the progress of his Anatolian conquests, Mahomet invested with a fleet and army the capital of David, who presumed to style himself emperor of Trebizond;<sup>2</sup> and the negotiation was comprised in a short and peremptory question, "Will you secure your life

<sup>1</sup> See the loss or conquest of Trebizond in Chalcocondyle G. II, p. 263-266; Ducas (c. 45), Phocas G. (ii. c. 27), and Cantacuz (p. 107).

<sup>2</sup> Though Tournefort (Itin. iii, lettre xvii, p. 116) speaks of Trebizond as well peopled, Paysonet, the latest and most accurate observer, can find 100,000 inhabitants (Commerce de la Mer Noire, tom. ii, p. 72. and for the province, p. 32-36). Its prosperity and trade are perpetually disturbed by the furious quarrels of two orders of janissaries, in one of which 30,000 men are commonly enrolled (Mémoires de Tour, tom. iii, p. 16, 17).

“ and treasures by resigning your kingdom? or “ had you rather forfeit your kingdom, your “ treasures, and your life?” The feeble Comnenus was subdued by his own fears, and the example of a mussulman neighbour, the prince of Sinope,<sup>a</sup> who, on a similar summons, had yielded a fortified city with four hundred cannon and ten or twelve thousand soldiers. The capitulation of Trebizond was faithfully performed;<sup>b</sup> and the emperor, with his family, was transported to a castle in Romania; but on a slight suspicion of corresponding with the Persian king, David, and the whole Comnenian race, were sacrificed to the jealousy or avarice of the conqueror. Nor could the name of father long protect the unfortunate Demetrius from exile and confiscation; his abject submission moved the pity and contempt of the sultan; his followers were transplanted to Constantinople; and his poverty was alleviated by a pension of fifty thousand aspers, till a monastic habit and a tardy death released Palaeologus from an earthly master. It is not easy to pronounce whether the servitude of Demetrius, or the exile of his brother Thomas,<sup>c</sup> be the most inglorious. On the conquest of the

Of Trebizond;
 L. d. 1461.

<sup>a</sup> Ismail Beg, prince of Sinope or Sinople, was possessed (chiefly from his copper mines) of the revenue of 400,000 dinars (Chalcoconul. L. ix. p. 253, 259). Pyramus (Commos de la Mer Noire, tom. ii. p. 190) ascribes to the modern city 60,000 inhabitants. This account seems exorbitant; yet it is by trading with a people that we become acquainted with their wealth and numbers.

<sup>b</sup> Spondanus (from Gabelis Comment. Pli. xi. l. v) relates the arrival and reception of the despot Thomas at Rome (L. d. 1461, No. 3.

CHAP.
LXVIII.

Morea, the despot escaped to Corfu, and from thence to Italy, with some naked adherents: his name, his sufferings, and the head of the apostle St. Andrew, entitled him to the hospitality of the Vatican; and his misery was prolonged by a pension of six thousand ducats from the pope and cardinals. His two sons, Andrew and Manuel, were educated in Italy; but the eldest, contemptible to his enemies and burthensome to his friends, was degraded by the baseness of his life and marriage. A title was his sole inheritance; and that inheritance he successively sold to the kings of France and Arragon.* During this transient prosperity, Charles the eighth was ambitious of joining the empire of the East with the kingdom of Naples; in a public festival, he assumed the appellation and the purple of Augustus: the Greeks rejoiced, and the Ottoman already trembled at the approach of the French chivalry.† Manuel Palæologus, the second son, was tempted to revisit his native country: his return might be grateful, and could not be dangerous, to the porte: he was maintained at Con-

* By an act, dated a. m. 1464, Sept. 6, and lately transmitted from the archives of the Capitol to the royal library of Paris, the despot Andrew Palæologus, reserving the Morea, and stipulating some private advantages, surreys to Charles viii, King of France, the empire of Constantinople and Thessalonica; Constantinople, a. m. 1425, No. 17, 31, de Fossemagne (Mém. de l'Académie des Inscriptions, tom. xlii, p. 338-379) has preserved a Dissertation on this national title, of which he had obtained a copy from Rome.

† See Philippe de Comines l. vii, c. 14, who reckons with pleasure the number of Greeks who were prepared to rise, 60 miles of a gay navigation, eighteen days journey from Valence to Constantinople, &c. On this occasion the Turkish empire was saved by the policy of Venice.

stantinople in safety and ease; and an honourable train of christians and Moslems attended him to the grave. If there be some animals of so generous a nature that they refuse to propagate in a domestic state, the last of the imperial race must be ascribed to an inferior kind; he accepted from the sultan's liberality two beautiful females; and his surviving son was lost in the habit and religion of a Turkish slave.

The importance of Constantinople was felt and magnified in its loss: the pontificate of Nicholas the fifth, however peaceful and prosperous, was dishonoured by the fall of the Eastern empire;
 and the grief and terror of the Latins revived, or seemed to revive, the old enthusiasm of the crusades. In one of the most distant countries of the West, Philip duke of Burgundy entertained, at Lisle in Flanders, an assembly of his nobles;
 and the pompous pageants of the feast were skilfully adapted to their fancy and feelings.* In the midst of the banquet, a gigantic Saracen entered the hall, leading a fictitious elephant, with a castle on his back; a matron in a mourning robe, the symbol of religion, was seen to issue from the castle; she deplored her oppression, and accused the slowness of her champions; the principal herald of the golden fleece advanced, bear-

CHAP.
 LXVIII.

Grief and terror of Europe.
 A. D. 1453.

* See the original feast in Oliver de la Marche (Mémoires, p. 1, c. 79, 80), with the abstract and observations of M. de St. Palaye (Mémoires sur la Chevalerie, tom. i, p. lii, p. 184-185). The peacock and the phoenix were distinguished as royal birds.

CHAP.
LXVIII.

ing on his fist a live pheasant, which, according to the rites of chivalry, he presented to the duke. At this extraordinary summons, Philip, a wise and aged prince, engaged his person and powers in the holy war against the Turks: his example was imitated by the barons and knights of the assembly: they swore to God, the virgin, the ladies, and the pheasant; and their particular vows were not less extravagant than the general sanction of their oath. But the performance was made to depend on some future and foreign contingency; and, during twelve years, till the last hour of his life, the duke of Burgundy might be scrupulously, and perhaps sincerely, on the eve of his departure. Had every breast glowed with the same ardour; had the union of the christians corresponded with their bravery; had every country, from Sweden* to Naples, supplied a just proportion of cavalry and infantry, of men and money, it is indeed probable that Constantinople would have been delivered, and that the Turks might have been chased beyond the Hellespont or the Euphrates. But the secretary of the emperor, who composed every epistle, and attended every meeting, Aeneas Sylvius,† a statesman and

* It was found by an actual enumeration, that Sweden, Gothland, and Finland, contained 1,400,000 fighting men, and consequently were far more populous than at present.

† In the year 1444 Spondanus has given, from Aeneas Sylvius, a view of the state of Europe, enriched with his own observations. That valuable quæsit, and the Italian Moretus, will continue the series of events from the year 1453 to 1461, the end of Mahomet's life, and of this chapter.

orator, describes from his own experience the repugnant state and spirit of Christendom, "It is a "body," says he, "without an head; a republic
 "without laws or magistrates. The pope and the "emperor may shine as lofty titles, as splendid "images; but they are unable to command, and
 "none are willing to obey: every state has a se"parate prince, and every prince has a separate "interest. What eloquence could unite so many "discordant and hostile powers under the same "standard? Could they be assembled in arms,
 "who would dare to assume the office of ge"neral? What order could be maintained?—
 "what military discipline? Who would under"take to feed such an enormous multitude?
 "Who would understand their various languages,
 "or direct their stranger and incompatible man"ners? What mortal could reconcile the Eng"lish with the French, Genoa with Arragon,
 "the Germans with the natives of Hungary and "Bohemia? If a small number enlisted in the "holy war, they must be overthrown by the infi"dels; if many, by their own weight and con"fusion." Yet the same Æneas, when he was raised to the papal throne, under the name of Pius the second, devoted his life to the prosecution of the Turkish war. In the council of Mantua he excited some sparks of a false or feeble enthusiasm; but when the pontiff appeared at Ancona, to embark in person with the troops, engagements vanished in excuses; a pre-

CHAP.
LXVIII.

the day was adjourned to an indefinite term; and his effective army consisted of some German pilgrims, whom he was obliged to disband with indulgences and alms. Regardless of futurity, his successors and the powers of Italy were involved in the schemes of present and domestic ambition; and the distance or proximity of each object determined, in their eyes, its apparent magnitude. A more enlarged view of their interest would have taught them to maintain a defensive and naval war against the common enemy: and the support of Scanderbeg and his brave Albanians might have prevented the subsequent invasion of the kingdom of Naples. The siege and sack of Otranto by the Turks diffused a general consternation; and pope Sixtus was preparing to fly beyond the Alps, when the storm was instantly dispelled by the death of Mahomet the second, in the fifty-first year of his age.<sup>d</sup> His lofty genius aspired to the conquest of Italy: he was possessed of a strong city and a capacious harbour; and the same

Death of Mahomet
II.
A. D. 1481,
May 3, or
July 2.

<sup>d</sup> Besides the two annalists, the reader may consult Giannone (Storia Civile, tom. III, p. 449-455) for the Turkish invasion of the kingdom of Naples. For the reign and conquests of Mahomet II, I have occasionally used the Memoire historique de Mouhammad Ottomand di Gorkani Sagredo (Venice, 1677, in 4to). In peace and war, the Turks have ever engaged the attention of the republic of Venice. All her dispatches and archives were open to a procurator of St. Mark, and Sagredo is not contemptible either in sense or style. Yet he too liberally treats the infidels; he is ignorant of their language and manners; and his narrative, which allows only seventy pages to Mahomet II (p. 69-140), becomes more copious and authentic as he approaches the years 1640 and 1644, the terms of the historic labours of John Sagredo.

reign might have been decorated with the trophies of the New and the Ancient Rome.*

CHAP.
LXVIII.

* As I am now taking an everlasting farewell of the Greek empire, I shall briefly mention the great collection of Byzantine writers, whose names and testimonies have been successively reported in this work. The Greek presses of Aldus and the Italians were confined to the classics of a better age; and the first rude editions of Ptolemy, Agathias, Cedrenus, Zonaras, &c. were published by the learned diligence of the Germans. The whole Byzantine series (26 volumes in folio) has gradually issued a. n. 1643, &c.) from the royal press of the Louvre, with some collateral aid from Rome and Leipzig; but the Venetian edition (a. n. 1729), though cheaper and more copious, is not less inferior in correctness than in magnificence to that of Paris. The merits of the French editors are various; but the value of Anna Comnena, Cinnamus, Villahermosa, &c. is enhanced by the historical notes of Charles de Froissart du Lange. His supplemental work, the Greek Geography, the Constantinople Christians, the Familiar Byzantium, diffuse a steady light over the darkness of the Lower Empire.

CHAP. LXIX.

State of Rome from the twelfth century.—Temporal dominion of the popes.—Seditions of the city.—Political heresy of Arnold of Brescia.—Restoration of the republic.—The senators.—Pride of the Romans. Their wars.—They are deprived of the election and presence of the popes, who retire to Avignon.—The jubilee.—Noble families of Rome.—Fend of the Colonna and Ursini.

CHAP.
LXIX.

State and revolutions
of Rome,
A. D. 1100–
1200.

IN the first ages of the decline and fall of the Roman empire, our eye is invariably fixed on the royal city, which had given laws to the fairest portion of the globe. We contemplate her fortunes, at first with admiration, at length with pity, always with attention; and when that attention is diverted from the capitol to the provinces, they are considered as so many branches which have been successively severed from the imperial trunk. The foundation of a second Rome on the shores of the Bosphorus has compelled the historian to follow the successors of Constantine; and our curiosity has been tempted to visit the most remote countries of Europe and Asia, to explore the causes and the authors of the long decay of the Byzantine monarchy. By the conquest of Justinian, we have been recalled to the banks of the Tyber, to the deliverance of the ancient metropolis; but that deliverance was a change, or perhaps an aggravation, of servitude. Rome had been already stripped of her trophies, her gods, and her Caesars; nor was the Gothic dominion more inglorious and oppressive than the tyranny of the Greeks. In the eighth century of the christian era, a religious quarrel, the worship of images, provoked the Romans to assert their independence: their bishop became the temporal, as well as the spiritual, father of a free people; and of the western empire, which was restored by Charlemagne, the title and image still decorate the singular constitution of modern Germany. The name of Rome must yet command our involuntary respect: the climate (whatsoever may be its influence) was no longer the same: the purity of blood had been contaminated through a thousand channels; but the venerable aspect of her ruins, and the memory of past greatness, re-kindled a spark of the national character. The darkness of the middle ages exhibits some scenes not unworthy of our notice. Nor shall I dismiss the present work till I have reviewed the state and revolutions of the Roman city, which acquiesced under the absolute dominion of the popes, about the same time that Constantinople was enslaved by the Turkish arms.

* The Abbe Dubou, who, with less genius than his predecessor Montesquieu, has asserted and magnified the influence of climate, objects to himself the degeneracy of the Romans and Byzantines. To the first of these examples he replies, 1. That the change is less real than apparent, and that the modern Romans prudently conceal in themselves the virtues of their ancestors. 2. That the air, the soil, and the climate, of Rome have suffered a great and visible alteration (Dissertations sur la Poésie et sur la Peinture, part II, sec. 10.)

CHAP.
LXIX.

The French and German em-perors of Rome,
a. d. 1000-1100.

In the beginning of the twelfth century,<sup>b</sup> the era of the first crusade, Rome was revered by the Latins, as the metropolis of the world, as the throne of the pope and the emperor; who, from the eternal city, derived their title, their honours, and the right or exercise of temporal dominion. After so long an interruption, it may not be useless to repeat that the successors of Charlemagne and the Othos were chosen beyond the Rhine in a national diet; but that these princes were content with the humble names of kings of Germany and Italy, till they had passed the Alps and the Apennine, to seek their imperial crown on the banks of the Tyber.<sup>c</sup> At some distance from the city, their approach was saluted by a long procession of the clergy and people with palms and crosses; and the terrific emblems of wolves and lions, of dragons and eagles, that floated in the military banners, represented the departed legions and cohorts of the republic. The royal oath to maintain the liberties of Rome was thrice reiterated, at the bridge, the gate, and on the stairs of the Vatican; and the distribution of a customary donative feebly imitated the magnificence of the first Cæsars. In the church of St. Peter, the coronation was performed by his successor: the voice of God was confounded with that of the people; and the public consent was declared in the acclamations of, " Long life and victory to " our lord the pope! Long life and victory to " our lord the emperor! Long life and victory " to the Roman and Teutonic armies!"<sup>a</sup> The names of Cæsar and Augustus, the laws of Constantine and Justinian, the example of Charlemagne and Otbo, established the supreme dominion of the emperors; their title and image was engraved on the papal coins;<sup>b</sup> and their jurisdiction was marked by the sword of justice, which they delivered to the prefect of the city. But every Roman prejudice was awakened by the name, the language, and the manners, of a barbarian lord. The Cæsars of Saxony or Franconia were the chiefs of a feudal aristocracy; nor could they exercise the discipline of civil and military power, which alone secures the obedience of a distant people, impatient of servitude, though perhaps incapable of freedom. Once, and once only, in his life, each emperor, with an army of Teutonic vassals, descended from the Alps. I have described the peaceful order of his entry and coronation; but that order was commonly dis-

<sup>b</sup> The reader has been so long absent from Rome, that I would advise him to recollect or review the forty-ninth chapter, in the ninth volume of this history.

<sup>c</sup> The coronation of the German emperors at Rome, more especially in the eleventh century, is best represented from the original monuments by Muratori (Antiquitat. Italicæ mediæ ævæ, tom. i, dissertat. ii, p. 99, &c.) and Giesi (Monument. Domsin. Pontific. tom. ii, diss. vi, p. 361), the latter of whom I only know from the copious extract of Schmidt (Hist. des Allemands, tom. iii, p. 265-266).

<sup>a</sup> Exercitus Romano et Teutonico! The latter was both seen and felt; but the former was no more than regal nominal aid.

<sup>b</sup> Muratori has given the series of the papal coins (Antiquitat. tom. ii. diss. xxvii. p. 348-354). He finds only two more early than the year 800: fifty are still extant from Leo III. to Leo IV. with addition of the reigning emperor: none remain of Gregory VII. or Urban II.; but in those of Paschal II. he seems to have renounced this badge of dependence.

CHAP.
LXIX

turbed by the clamour and sedition of the Romans, who encountered their sovereign as a foreign invader: his departure was always speedy, and often shameful; and, in the absence of a long reign, his authority was insulted and his name was forgotten. The progress of independence in Germany and Italy undermined the foundations of the imperial sovereignty, and the triumph of the popes was the deliverance of Rome.

Authority of the popes in
Rome,

Of her two sovereigns, the emperor had precariously reigned by the right of conquest; but the authority of the popes was founded on the soft, though more solid, basis of opinion and habit. The removal of a foreign influence restored and endeared the shepherd to his flock. Instead of the arbitrary or venal nomination of a German court, the vicar of Christ was freely chosen by the college of cardinals, most of whom were either natives or inhabitants of the city. The applause of the magistrates and people confirmed his election; and the ecclesiastical power that was obeyed in Sweden and Britain had been ultimately derived from the suffrage of the Romans. The same suffrage gave a prince, as well as a pontiff, to the capital. It was universally believed, that Constantine had invested the popes with a temporal dominion of Rome; and the boldest civilians, the most prophane sceptics, were satisfied with disputing the right of the emperor and the validity of his gift. The truth of the fact, the authenticity of his donation, was deeply rooted in the ignorance and tradition of four centuries; and the fabulous origin was lost in the real and permanent effects.

from affection.

The name of dominus or lord was inscribed on the coin of the bishops: their title was acknowledged by acclamations and oaths of allegiance; and with the free, or reluctant consent of the German Cæsars, they had long exercised a supreme or subordinate jurisdiction over the city and patrimony of St. Peter. The reign of the popes, which gratified the prejudices, was not incompatible with the liberties, of Rome; and a more critical enquiry would have revealed a still nobler source of their power; the gratitude of a nation, whom they had rescued from the heresy and oppression of the Greek tyrant. In an age of superstition, it should seem that the union of the royal and sacerdotal characters would mutually fortify each other; and that the keys of paradise would be the surest pledge of earthly obedience. The sanctity of the office might indeed be degraded by the personal vices of the man; but the scandals of the tenth century were obliterated by the austere and more dangerous virtues of Gregory the seventh and his successors; and in the ambitious contests which they maintained for the rights of the church, their sufferings or their success must equally tend to increase the popular veneration. They sometimes wandered in poverty and exile, the victims of persecution; and the apostolic zeal with which they offered themselves to martyrdom must engage the favour and sympathy of every catholic breast. And sometimes, thundering from the Vatican, they created, judged, and deposed the kings of the world: nor could the proudest Roman be disgraced by submitting to a right

CHAP.
LXIX.

virtue:

CHAP.
LXIX.

benefits :

priest, whose feet were kissed, and whose stirrup was held by the successors of Charlemagne.† Even the temporal interest of the city should have protected in peace and honour the residence of the popes; from whence a vain and lazy people derived the greatest part of their subsistence and riches. The fixed revenue of the popes was probably impaired: many of the old patrimonial estates, both in Italy and the provinces, had been invaded by sacrilegious hands; nor could the loss be compensated by the claim, rather than the possession, of the more ample gifts of Pepin and his descendants. But the Vatican and capitol were nourished by the incessant and increasing swarms of pilgrims and suppliants: the pale of christianity was enlarged, and the pope and cardinals were overwhelmed by the judgment of ecclesiastical and secular causes. A new jurisprudence had established in the Latin church the right and practice of appeals:‡ and, from the north and west, the bishops and abbots were invited or summoned to solicit, to complain, to accuse, or to justify, before the threshold of the apostles. A rare prodigy is once recorded, CHAP.

† See Duceage, Gloss. medice et infime Latinitat. tom. vi, p. 344, 355. Stafa. This homage was paid by kings to archbishops, and by vassals to their lords (Schmidt, tom. iii, p. 367); and it was the wisest policy of Rome to confer the marks of filial and of feudal subjection.

‡ The appeals from all the churches to the Roman pontiff are deplored by the zeal of St. Bernard (his Considerations, l. iii, tom. ii, p. 431-442, edit. Mabillon, Venet. 1756) and the judgment of Fleury (Discours sur l'Hist. Ecclesiastique, ix and xii). But the saint, who believed in the false decretals, condemns only the abuse of these appeals; the more enlightened historian investigates the origin, and rejects the principles, of this new jurisprudence.

LXIX. that two horses, belonging to the archbishops of Mentz and Cologne, repassed the Alps, yet laden with gold and silver :<sup>b</sup> but it was soon understood, that the success, both of the pilgrims and clients, depended much less on the justice of their cause than on the value of their offering. The wealth and piety of these strangers were ostentatiously displayed ; and their expences, sacred or profane, circulated in various channels for the emolument of the Romans.

Such powerful motives should have firmly Inconstancy of superstition. attached the voluntary and pious obedience of the Roman people to their spiritual and temporal father. But the operation of prejudice and interest is often disturbed by the sallies of ungovernable passion. The Indian who fells the tree, that he may gather the fruit,<sup>c</sup> and the Arab who plunders the caravans of commerce, are actuated by the same impulse of savage nature, which overlooks the future in the present, and relinquishes for momentary rapine the long and secure possession of the most important blessings. And it was thus that the shrine of St. Peter was profaned by the thoughtless Romans ; who pillaged the offerings, and wounded the pilgrims, without <sup>b</sup> Germanici . . . . summam non levissimè sacrilegiis omni nihilominus repugnantibus. Nova res ! quando hactenus aurum Roma refusa ! Et nunc Germanicorum comitibus id auriparum non credimus (Bernard de Consideratione, l. iii, c. 3, p. 437). The first words of the passage are obscure, and probably corrupt.

<sup>c</sup> Quand les sauvages de la Louisiane veulent avoir du fruit, ils coupent l'arbre au pied et cueillent le fruit. Voilà le gouvernement despotique (Esprit des Loix, l. v, c. 13) ; and passion and ignorance are always despotic.

CHAP.
LXIX.

computing the number and value of similar visits, which they prevented by their inhospitable sacrilege. Even the influence of superstition is fluctuating and precarious; and the slave, whose reason is subdued, will often be delivered by his avarice or pride. A credulous devotion for the fables and oracles of the priesthood most powerfully acts on the mind of a barbarian; yet such a mind is the least capable of preferring imagination to sense, of sacrificing to a distant motive, to an invisible, perhaps an ideal, object, the appetites and interests of the present world. In the vigour of health and youth, his practice will perpetually contradict his belief; till the pressure of age, or sickness, or calamity, awakens his terrors, and compels him to satisfy the double debt of piety and remorse. I have already observed, that the modern times of religious indifference are the most favourable to the peace and security of the clergy. Under the reign of superstition, they had much to hope from the ignorance, and much to fear from the violence, of mankind. The wealth, whose constant increase must have rendered them the sole proprietors of the earth, was alternately bestowed by the repentant father, and plundered by the rapacious son: their persons were adored or violated; and the same idol, by the hands of the same votaries, was placed on the altar or trampled in the dust. In the feudal system of Europe, arms were the title of distinction and the measure of allegiance; and amidst their tumult, the still voice of law and reason was seldom heard or obeyed. The turbulent Romans dis-

Seditious of Barons against the popes.

dained the yoke, and insulted the impotence, of their bishop;<sup>4</sup> nor would his education or character allow him to exercise, with decency or effect, the power of the sword. The motives of his election and the frailties of his life were exposed to their familiar observation; and proximity must diminish the reverence, which his name and his decrees impressed on a barbarous world. This difference has not escaped the notice of our philosophic historian: "Though the " name and authority of the court of Rome were " so terrible in the remote countries of Europe,
 " which were sunk in profound ignorance, and
 " were entirely unacquainted with its character
 " and conduct, the pope was so little revered at " home, that his inveterate enemies surrounded
 " the gates of Rome itself, and even controlled
 " his government in that city; and the ambas" sadors, who, from a distant extremity of Eu" rope, carried to him the humble, or rather ab" ject, submissions of the greatest potentate of " the age, found the utmost difficulty to make " their way to him, and to throw themselves at " his feet."<sup>5</sup>

<sup>4</sup> In a free conversation with the countryman Adelan II, John of Salisbury accuses the avarice of the pope and clergy: Procurantur desuper spolia, ac etiam thesaurus Opus studentis reperire. Sed recte cum eis agitur utiuntur, quantum et ipsi illis et omnes officij suis humilitas dant aut in dispendium (de Signis Cardinalium, l. vi, c. 74, p. 387). In the next page, he blames the rashness and infidelity of the Romans, whom their bishops vainly strive to conciliate by gifts, instead of virtues. It is a pity that this miscellaneous writer has not given us less novelty and erudition, and more pictures of manners and the times.

<sup>5</sup> Hume's History of England, vol. i, p. 410. The same writer has given us, from Fitz-Stephen, a singular act of cruelty perpetrated

CHAP.
LXIX.

Successors
of Gregory VII.
A.D. 1086-1205.

Since the primitive times, the wealth of the popes was exposed to envy, their power to opposition, and their persons to violence. But the long hostility of the mitre and the crown increased the numbers, and inflamed the passions, of their enemies. The deadly factions of the Guelphs and Ghibelines, so fatal to Italy, could never be embraced with truth or constancy by the Romans, the subjects and adversaries both of the bishop and emperor; but their support was solicited by both parties; and they alternately displayed in their banners the keys of St. Peter and the German eagle. Gregory the seventh, who may be adored or detested as the founder of the papal monarchy, was driven from Rome, and died in exile at Salerno. Six-and-thirty of his successors,* till their retreat to Avignon, maintained an unequal contest with the Romans: their age and dignity were often violated; and the churches, in the solemn rites of religion, were polluted with sedition and murder. A repetition<sup>o</sup> of such capricious brutality, with-on the clergy by Geoffrey, the father of Henry II. "When he was "master of Normandy, the chapter of Sens presumed, without his "consent, to proceed to the election of a bishop: upon which he or"dered all of them, with the bishop elect, to be incarcerated, and made "all their tortures be brought him in a phial." Of the pain and danger they might justly complain; yet, when they had ended consutally, he deprived them of a superfluous transire.

* From Leo ix. and Gregory vii. an authentic and contemporary series of the lives of the popes by the cardinal of Arragon, Paulinus Ponsus, Bernard Goido, &c. is inserted in the Italian History of Muratori (Rom. iii. p. 6, p. 571-683), and has been always before my eyes.

* The dates of years in the margin may throughout this chapter be understood as such references to the Annals of Muratori; my ordinary

CHAP.
LXIX.

out connection or design, would be tedious and disgusting; and I shall content myself with some events of the twelfth century, which represent the state of the popes and the city. On Holy Thursday, while Paschal officiated before the altar, he was interrupted by the clamours of the multitude, who imperiously demanded the confirmation of a favourite magistrate. His silence exasperated their fury: his pious refusal to mingle the affairs of earth and heaven was encountered with menaces and oaths, that he should be the cause and the witness of the public ruin. During the festival of Easter, while the bishop and the clergy, barefoot and in procession, visited the tombs of the martyrs, they were twice assaulted, at the bridge of St. Angelo, and before the capitol, with volleys of stones and darts. The houses of his adherents were levelled with the ground: Paschal escaped with difficulty and danger: he levied an army in the patrimony of St. Peter; and his last days were embittered by suffering and inflicting the calamities of civil war. The scenes that followed the election of his successor, Gelasius the second, were still more scandalous to the church and city. Cencio Frangipani,* a potent and fractious baron, burst into the assembly, furious and in arms:

Paschal II,
A. D. 1089-
1118.Gelasius II,
A. D. 1118-
1119.

nary and excellent guide. He uses, and indeed quotes, with the freedom of a master, his great Collection of the Indian Historians, in 24 volumes; and as that treasure is in my library, I have thought it an amusement, if not a duty, to consult the originals.

* I cannot refuse from transcribing the high-coloured words of Pauluspius Plinius (p. 384): Hoc audient iulianicus puer atque turbatus jent setas Cencius Frangipane, more draconis immanissimi sibilans, et ab illis percutibus trahens longa semper, amictus retro gladio

CHAP.
LXIX.

the cardinals were stripped, beaten, and trampled under foot; and he seized, without pity or respect, the vicar of Christ by the throat. Gelasius was dragged by his hair along the ground, buffeted with blows, wounded with spurs, and bound with an iron chain in the house of his brutal tyrant. An insurrection of the people delivered their bishop; the rival families opposed the violence of the Frangipani; and Cencio, who sued for pardon, repented of the failure, rather than of the guilt, of his enterprise. Not many days had elapsed, when the pope was again assaulted at the altar. While his friends and enemies were engaged in a bloody contest, he escaped in his sacerdotal garments. In this unworthy flight, which excited the compassion of the Roman matrons, his attendants were scattered or unhorsed; and, in the fields behind the church of St. Peter, his successor was found alone and half-dead with fear and fatigue.—Shaking the dust from his feet, the apostle withdrew from a city in which his dignity was insulted and his person was endangered; and the vanity of sacerdotal ambition is revealed in the involuntary confession, that one emperor was more tolerable than twenty.* These gladio et hoc tunc curavit, veluti ut ferox confregit. Ecclesiam turbandas introit, inde extulit prout papam per gulam accepit, et, traxit, pugnis volutibusque percutit, et tanquam leonem subitum intra limen ecclesie perper calcasibus eruditavit; et tunc tantum dominum per capillos et brachia. Jam tunc interim dormiente, detracti ad domum, pedes deducit, inde extulit et includit.

* Ego curam Deo et ecclesie dico, si nunquam pontifex esset, malum unum imperatorem quam tot dominos (Vit. Gelas. v. p. 295).

examples might suffice; but I cannot forget the sufferings of two pontiffs of the same age, the second and third of the name of Lucius. The former, as he ascended in battle-array to assault the capitol, was struck on the temple by a stone, and expired in a few days. The latter was severely wounded in the persons of his servants. In a civil commotion, several of his priests had been made prisoners; and the inhuman Romans, reserving one as a guide for his brethren, put out their eyes, crowned them with ludicrous mitres, mounted them on asses with their faces to the tail, and extorted an oath, that, in this wretched condition, they should offer themselves as a lesson to the head of the church. Hope or fear, lassitude or remorse, the characters of the men, and the circumstances of the times, might sometimes obtain an interval of peace and obedience; and the pope was restored with joyful acclamations to the Lateran or Vatican, from whence he had been driven with threats and violence. But the root of mischief was deep and perennial; and a momentary calm was preceded and followed by such tempests as had almost sunk the bark of St. Peter. Rome continually presented the aspect of war and discord; the churches and palaces were fortified and assaulted by the factions and families; and, after giving peace to Europe, Calistus the second alone had resolution and power to prohibit the use of private arms in the metropolis. Among the nations who revered the apostolic throne, the tumults of Rome provoked a general indignation; and, in a letter to his disciple Eugenius the third, St. Bernard, with the sharp-

CHAP.
 LXIX.

Lucius II.
 A. D. 1144-
 1145.

Lucius III.
 A. D. 1181-
 1182.

Calistus II.
 A. D. 1119-
 1124.

Innocent III.
 A. D. 1198-
 1199.

CHAP.
LXIX.

Character
of the Romans by St.
Bernard.

ness of his wit and zeal, has stigmatised the vices of the rebellious people.* “Who is ignorant,” says the monk of Clairvaux, “of the “vanity and arrogance of the Romans? a nation “nursed in sedition, cruel, untractable, and scorn“ing to obey, unless they are too feeble to re“sist. When they promise to serve, they aspire “to reign; if they swear allegiance, they watch
“the opportunity of revolt; yet they vent their “discontent in loud clamours if your doors or “your councils are shut against them. Dextrous “in mischief, they have never learnt the science of “doing good. Odious to earth and heaven, im“pious to God, seditious among themselves, jea“lous of their neighbours, inhuman to strangers,
“they love no one, by no one are they beloved;
“and while they wish to inspire fear, they live in “haze and continual apprehension. They will “not submit; they know how to govern; faith“less to their superiors, intolerable to their equals, “ungrateful to their benefactors, and alike im“prudent in their demands and their refusals.
“Lofty in promise, poor in execution: adulation
“and calumny, perfidy, and treason, are the fami“liar arts of their policy.” Surely this dark portrait is not coloured by the pencil of christian charity: yet the features, however harsh and * Quid non notum, sceleris quam protrevis et servitutis Romanorum? Gens insensata pœd, intemeralis avaritia, gens humilis et intractabilis atque adhaec, subitum, nisi corp non valet resistere (de Considerat. l. iv, c. 2, p. 441). The saint takes breath, and then begins again: III, Inval terror et odio, utrique inferere manus, &c,

p. 443).

† As a Roman citizen, Petrus takes leave to observe, that Bernard, though a saint, was a man; that he might be provoked by re-signment.

ugly, express a lively resemblance of the Romans of the twelfth century.<sup>2</sup>

CHAP.
LXIX.

The Jews had rejected the Christ when he appeared among them in a plebeian character; and the Romans might plead their ignorance of his vicar when he assumed the pomp and pride of a temporal sovereign. In the busy age of the crusades, some sparks of curiosity and reason were re-kindled in the western world: the heresy of Bulgaria, the paulician sect, was successfully transplanted into the soil of Italy and France; the Gnostic visions were mingled with the simplicity of the gospel; and the enemies of the clergy reconciled their passions with their conscience, the desire of freedom with the profession of piety.<sup>3</sup> The trumpet of Roman liberty was first sounded by Arnold of Brescia,<sup>4</sup> whose promotion in the church was confined to the lowest rank, and who wore the monastic habit rather as a garb of poverty

Political heresy of Arnold of Brescia,
A. D. 1140.

sentiment, and possibly repent of his hasty passion, &c. (Memoires sur la Vie de Petrarque, tom. 1, p. 230).

<sup>2</sup> Barnardus, in his index to the twelfth volume of his Annals, has found a life and easy access. He makes two heads, of Manuel Comnenus and Schismatics: to the former he applies all the good, to the latter all the evil, that is told of the city.

<sup>3</sup> The heretics of the twelfth century may be found in Madsen (Institut. Hist. Ecclæ, p. 418-427), who entertains a favourable opinion of Arnold of Brescia. In the tenth volume I have described the sect of the paulicians, and followed their migration from Armenia to Thrace and Bulgaria, Italy and France.

<sup>4</sup> The original pictures of Arnold of Brescia are drawn by Otto bishop of Frisingen (Chron. l. vii, c. 31, de gente Frederici 1, l. l. c. 27, l. ii, c. 21), and in the third book of the Legatione, a poem of Gunther, who flourished A. D. 1200, in the monastery of Paris near Beut (Fabrie. Biblioth. Latinæ med. et infimæ ætatis, tom. iii, p. 174, 175). The long passage that relates to Arnold is produced by Guchiman (de Rebus Helveticis, l. ii, c. 3, p. 108).

CHAP.
LXIX.

than as an uniform of obedience. His adversaries could not deny the wit and eloquence which they severely felt: they confess with reluctance the specious purity of his morals; and his errors were recommended to the public by a mixture of important and beneficial truths. In his theological studies, he had been the disciple of the famous and unfortunate Abelard,* who was likewise involved in the suspicion of heresy: but the lover of Eloisa was of a soft and flexible nature; and his ecclesiastic judges were edified and disarmed by the humility of his repentance. From this master, Arnold most probably imbibed some metaphysical definitions of the trinity, repugnant to the taste of the times: his ideas of baptism and the eucharist are loosely censured; but a political heresy was the source of his fame and misfortunes. He presumed to quote the declaration of Christ, that his kingdom is not of this world: he boldly maintained, that the sword and the sceptre were entrusted to the civil magistrate; that temporal honours and possessions were lawfully vested in secular persons; that the abbots, the bishops, and the pope himself, must renounce either their state or their salvation; and that after the loss of their revenues, the voluntary tithes and oblations of the faithful would suffice, not indeed for luxury and avarice, but for a frugal life in the exercise of spiritual labours. During a short time, the preacher was revered as a patriot; and the discontent, or revolt, of Brescia against her bishop was the first fruits of his dangerous lessons. But the favour of the people is less permanent than the resentment of the priest; and after the heresy of Arnold had been condemned by Innocent the second,<sup>2</sup> in the general council of the Lateran, the magistrates themselves were urged by prejudice and fear to execute the sentence of the church. Italy could no longer afford a refuge, and the disciple of Abelard escaped beyond the Alps, till he found a safe and hospitable shelter in Zurich, now the first of the Swiss cantons. From a Roman station,<sup>3</sup> a royal villa, a chapter of noble virgins, Zurich had gradually increased to a free and flourishing city; where the appeals of the Milanese were sometimes tried by the imperial commissaries.<sup>4</sup> In an age less ripe for reformation, the precursor of Zuinglius was heard with applause: a brave and simple people imbibed and

* The wicked wit of Bayle was amused in composing, with much levity and laughing, the articles of Abelard, Foodore, Heloise, in his Dictionnaire Critique. The dispute of Abelard and St. Bernard, of scholastic and positive divinity, is well understood by Mosheim (Histor. Hist. Eccles. p. 412-413).

———Damnatus ab illo

Prædile, quod numerus & citius sustulitque nocens

Nomen ab ætate ducti mirabile vixit.

We may applaud the severity, and exactness of Liguinus, who turns the unpoetical name of Innocent into a compliment.

<sup>2</sup> A Roman inscription of Santa Turicensis has been found at Zurich (d'Anville, Noticiæ de Cantuaria Gaule, p. 642-644); but it is without sufficient warrant, that the city and canton have usurped, and even monopolized, the names of Tigurum and Pagus Tigurinus.

<sup>3</sup> Guilielmus de Behm Historiæ, l. III. c. 3, p. 100, recapitulates the donations (i. e. 833) of the emperor Lewis the pious to his daughter the abbess Hildegardus. Curtius nostrum Tigurum is described Alamannis in pago Orgaungensi, with villages, woods, meadows, waters, marshes, churches, &c. a noble gift. Charles the bold gave the first monastery; the city was walled under Otto II and the line of the bishop of Frisingen.

Nobilis Tigurum multarum copis ætatis,

is repared with pictures by the antiquaries of Zurich.

CHAP.
LXIX.

long retained the colour of his opinions; and his art, or merit, seduced the bishop of Constance, and even the pope's legate, who forgot, for his sake, the interest of their master and their order. Their tardy zeal was quickened by the fierce exhortations of St. Bernard;<sup>2</sup> and the enemy of the church was driven, by persecution, to the desperate measure of erecting his standard in Rome itself, in the face of the successor of St. Peter.

He exhorts
the Romans to restore the republic.
Æ. D. 1144.
1154.

Yet the courage of Arnold was not devoid of discretion: he was protected, and had perhaps been invited, by the nobles and people; and in the service of freedom, his eloquence thundered over the seven hills. Blending in the same discourse the texts of Livy and St. Paul, uniting the motives of gospel, and of classic, enthusiasm, he admonished the Romans, how strangely their patience and the vices of the clergy had degenerated from the primitive times of the church and the city. He exhorted them to assert the inalienable rights of men and christians; to restore the laws and magistrates of the republic; to respect the name of the emperor; but to confine their shepherd to the spiritual government of his flock.* Nor could his spiritual government escape the

<sup>2</sup> St. Bernard, epistol. card., card., lib. 1, p. 181-180. Amongst his incentives he drops a precious acknowledgment, quæ, utinam quam maxime vobis, delectationem quam delectationem est vobis. He says that Arnold would be a valuable acquisition for the church.

* He advised the Romans,

*Consilium arbitrioque vobis moderantibus omnia
Arbitrio maxime vobis: illi jura in hunc re
Pontificis summi, moderantibus vobis regi
Sanctis populi. Sic hunc vultus vultus Majestate, vultus vultus vultus vultus.*

Nor is the poetry of Gunther different from the prose of Otto.

censure and controul of the reformer: and the inferior clergy were taught, by his lessons, to resist the cardinals, who had usurped a despotic command over the twenty-eight regions or parishes of Rome.* The revolution was not accomplished without rapine and violence, the effusion of blood, and the demolition of houses; the victorious faction was enriched with the spoils of the clergy and the adverse nobles. Arnold of Brescia enjoyed, or deplored, the effects of his mission: his reign continued above ten years, while two popes, Innocent the second and Anastasius the fourth, either trembled in the Vatican, or wandered as exiles in the adjacent cities. They were succeeded by a more vigorous and fortunate pontiff, Adrian the fourth,† the only Englishman who has ascended the throne of St. Peter; and whose merit emerged from the mean condition of a monk, and almost a beggar, in the monastery of St. Albans. On the first provocation, of a cardinal killed or wounded in the streets, he cast an interdict on the guilty people; and, from Christmas to Easter, Rome was deprived of the real or imaginary comforts of religious worship. The Romans had despised their temporal prince: they submitted, with grief and terror, to the censures of their spiritual father: their guilt was expiated by penance, and the banishment of the * See Baronius l. v. 1148, No. 38, 39) from the Vatican web. He loudly condemns Arnold (l. v. 1141, No. 3) as the father of the political heretics, whose influence then hurt him in France.

† The English reader may consult the Biographia Britannica, Adrian iv; but our own writers have added nothing to the fame or merits of their countryman.

CHAP.
LXIX.

seditions preacher was the price of their absolution. But the revenge of Adrian was yet unsatisfied, and the approaching coronation of Frederic Barbarossa was fatal to the bold reformer, who had offended, though not in an equal degree, the heads of the church and state. In their interview at Viterbo, the pope represented to the emperor the furious ungovernable spirit of the Romans; the insults, the injuries, the fears, to which his person and his clergy were continually exposed; and the pernicious tendency of the heresy of Arnold, which must subvert the principles of civil, as well as ecclesiastical, subordination. Frederic was convinced by these arguments, or tempted by the desire of the imperial crown; in the balance of ambition, the innocence or life of an individual is of small account; and their common enemy was sacrificed to a moment of political concord. After his retreat from Rome, Arnold had been protected by the viscounts of Campania, from whom he was extorted by the power of Caesar; the prefect of the city pronounced his sentence; the martyr of freedom was burnt alive in the presence of a careless and ungrateful people; and his ashes were cast into the Tyber, lest the heretics should collect and worship the relics of their master.* The clergy triumphed in his death: with his ashes, his sect was dispersed; his memory still lived in the minds of the Romans. From his school they had probably derived a new article of

His execution,
Ann.
a. d. 1163.

* Besides the historians and poet already quoted, the last adventures of Arnold are related by the biographer of Adrian IV. (Marstoni, Script. Barum Ital. rom. III, p. 1, p. 441, 442).

faith, that the metropolis of the catholic church is exempt from the penalties of excommunication and interdict. Their bishops might argue, that the supreme jurisdiction, which they exercised over kings and nations, more especially embraced the city and diocese of the prince of the apostles. But they preached in the winds, and the same principle that weakened the effect, must temper the abuse, of the thunders of the Vatican.

CHAP.
LXIX.

The love of ancient freedom has encouraged a belief, that as early as the tenth century, in their first struggles against the Saxon Othos, the commonwealth was vindicated and restored by the senate and people of Rome; that two consuls were annually elected among the nobles, and that ten or twelve plebeian magistrates revived the name and office of the tribunes of the commons.<sup>1</sup> But this venerable structure disappears before the light of criticism. In the darkness of the middle ages, the appellations of senators, of consuls, of the sons of consuls, may sometimes be discovered.<sup>2</sup>

Restoration of the senate.
a. 1144.

<sup>1</sup> Donatus episcopus, Lactantius miles et iustus, Alutius Domesticanus, tom. ii. p. 320 gives us a quotation from Plinius (liber. 41. l. 11) : Two consules ex nobilibus quatuordecim ; and ad. vetustatem omnium exemplis scriptis ferre proventum, and so Augustus (the Regno Italia, l. 41. app. tom. ii. p. 403) I read, of the senate and tribunes of the tenth century. Both Blondius, and even Sigurdus, too fondly copied the classic method of supplying, from research or fancy, the deficiency of records.

<sup>2</sup> In the panegyric of Bartholomæus (Muratori, Script. Hist. Ital. tom. ii. p. l. p. 469) a Roman is mentioned as consul as early as the beginning of the tenth century. Muratori (liber. 15) discovers, in the years 947 and 954, Gerardus in Dei nomine consul & dux; Gregorius consul & dux; and in 1014, Hermanus, brother of Gregory viz. pope, too regularly, styles himself consul & dux & præfatus Romanorum senatus.

CHAP.
LXIX.

They were bestowed by the emperors, or assumed by the most powerful citizens, to denote their rank, their honours,<sup>a</sup> and perhaps the claim of a pure and patrician descent; but they float on the surface, without a series or a substance; the titles of men, not the orders of government;<sup>b</sup> and it is only from the year of Christ one thousand one hundred and forty-four, that the establishment of the senate is dated, as a glorious era, in the acts of the city. A new constitution was hastily framed by private ambition, or popular enthusiasm; nor could Rome, in the twelfth century, produce an antiquary to explain, or a legislator to restore, the harmony and proportions of the ancient model. The assembly of a free, of an armed, people will ever speak in loud and weighty acclamations. But the regular distribution of the thirty-five tribes, the nice balance of the wealth and numbers of the centuries, the debates of the adverse orators, and the slow operation of votes and ballots, could not easily be adapted by a blind

<sup>a</sup> As late as the tenth century, the Greek emperors conferred on the dukes of Venice, Naples, Amalphi, &c. the title of Senator, or consul (see Chron. Sigonini, passim); and the successors of Charlemagne would not abdicate any of their prerogatives. But, in general, the terms of senator and consul, which may be found among the French and Germans, signify no more than chief and lord (Siguier, Ducange, Glomer.). The monkish writers are often ambitious of the Greek words.

<sup>b</sup> The most constitutional form is a diploma of Otto III. (A. D. 968), Consilium sancte populique Romanæ; but the act is probably spurious. At the coronation of Henry I. A. D. 1014, the learned Bithmar (aped Muratori, dissert. xvi.) describes him, a consilioque divocatum vallatum, quorum sex vestibulo, alii pectus, ceteros in excelsis cum barathra. The senate is mentioned in the preface of Berengarius (p. 406).

multitude, ignorant of the arts, and insensible of the benefits, of legal government. It was proposed by Arnold to revive and discriminate the equestrian order; but what could be the motive or measure of such distinction? The pecuniary qualification of the knights must have been reduced to the poverty of the times: those times no longer required their civil functions of judges and farmers of the revenue; and their primitive duty, their military service on horseback, was more nobly supplied by feudal tenures and the spirit of chivalry. The jurisprudence of the republic was useless and unknown: the nations and families of Italy who lived under the Roman and barbaric laws were insensibly mingled in a common mass; and some faint tradition, some imperfect fragments, preserved the memory of the code and pandects of Justinian. With their liberty the Romans might doubtless have restored the appellation and office of consul; had they not disclaimed a title so promiscuously adopted in the Italian cities, that it has finally settled on the humble station of the agents of commerce in a foreign land. But the rights of the tribunes, the formidable word that arrested the public counsels, suppose or must produce a legitimate democracy. The old patricians were the subjects, the modern barons the tyrants, of the state; nor would the enemies of peace and order, * In ancient Rome, the equestrian order was not ranked with the senate and people as a third branch of the republic till the consulship of Cæsar, who assumes the merit of the establishment (Flin. Hist. Natur. lxxviii, & Bouquet République Romaine, tom. 4, p. 144-152).

CHAP.
LXIX.

who insulted the vicar of Christ, have long respected the unarm'd sanctity of a plebeian magistrate.*

The Capit-
tol.

In the revolution of the twelfth century, which gave a new existence and era to Rome, we may observe the real and important events that marked or confirmed her political independence. 1. The Capitoline hill, one of her seven eminences,<sup>a</sup> is about four hundred yards in length, and two hundred in breadth. A flight of an hundred steps led to the summit of the Tarpeian rock; and far steeper was the ascent before the declivities had been smoothed, and the precipices filled by the ruins of fallen edifices. From the earliest ages, the Capitol had been used as a temple in peace, a fortress in war: after the loss of the city, it maintained a siege against the victorious Gaul, and the sanctuary of empire was occupied, assaulted, and burnt, in the civil wars of Vitellius and Vespasian.* The temples of Ju-

* The republican plan of Arnold of Brescia is thus stated by Guizer:

Quin etiam iustis nobis revocare velintor:
Nominis plebis sacrorumq; nomen equestre,
Jura tribunorum, sanctum reparare senatum,
Et cunctis terras antiquas reponere leges.
Lapsa ruinas, et adhuc pendula muris
Reddere prorsus Capitolis præces nitui.

But of these reformations, some were no more than ideas, others no more than words.

* After many disputes among the antiquaries of Rome, it seems determined, that the summit of the Capitoline hill next the river is strictly the Mons Tarpeus, the Arx; and that on the other summit, the church and convent of Anacleti, the barefoot friars of St. Francis, occupy the temple of Jupiter (Nardini, Roma Antica, l. v, c. 11-16).

<sup>a</sup> Tacit. Hist. iii, 69, 70.

piler and his kindred deities had crumbled into dust; their place was supplied by monasteries and houses; and the solid walls, the long and sheltering porticoes, were decayed or ruined by the lapse of time. It was the first act of the Romans, an act of freedom, to restore the strength, though not the beauty, of the capital; to fortify the seat of their arms and counsels; and as often as they ascended the hill, the coldest minds must have glowed with the remembrance of their ancestors.

II. The first Cæsars had been invested with the exclusive coinage of the gold and silver; to the senate they abandoned the baser metal of bronze or copper.<sup>2</sup> The emblems and legends were inscribed on a more ample field by the genius of flattery; and the prince was relieved from the care of celebrating his own virtues. The successors of Diocletian desisted even the flattery of the senate: their royal officers at Rome, and in the provinces, assumed the sole direction of the mint; and the same prerogative was inherited by the Gothic kings of Italy, and the long series of the Greek, the French, and the German dynasties. After an abdication of eight hundred years, the Roman senate asserted this honourable and lucrative privilege; which was tacitly renounced by the popes, from Paschal the second to the establishment of their residence beyond the Alps.

<sup>2</sup> This partition of the noble and baser metals between the emperor and senate must however be adopted, not as a positive fact, but as the probable opinion of the best authorities (see the science des Médailles of the Père Joubert, tom. II. p. 208-211, in the improved and correct edition of the Baron de la Borde).

CHAP.
LXIX.The prefect of the city.

Some of these republican coins of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries are shewn in the cabinets of the curious. On one of these, a gold medal, Christ is depicted holding in his left hand a book with this inscription: "THE VOW OF THE ROMAN SENATE AND PEOPLE: ROME THE CAPITAL OF THE WORLD;" on the reverse, St. Peter delivering a banner to a kneeling senator in his cap and gown, with the name and arms of his family impressed on his shield.* With the empire, the prefect of the city had declined to a municipal officer; yet he still exercised in his last appeal the civil and criminal jurisdiction; and a drawn sword, which he received from the successors of Otho, was the mode of his investiture and the emblems of his functions.† The dignity was confined to the noble families of Rome: the choice of the people was ratified by the pope; but a triple oath of fidelity must have often embarrassed the prefect in the conflict of adverse duties.* A servant, in whom they possessed but a third share, was dismissed by the independent Romans: in his place they elected a patrician; but this title, which Charlemagne had not disdained, was too lofty for a citizen or a subject; and, after the first fervour of rebellion, they consented without reluctance to the restoration of the prefect. About fifty years after this event, Innocent the third, the most ambitious, or at least the most fortunate, of the pontiffs, delivered the Romans and himself from this badge of foreign dominion; he invested the prefect with a banner instead of a sword, and absolved him from all dependence of oaths or service to the German emperors.<sup>a</sup> In his place an ecclesiastic, a present or future cardinal, was named by the pope to the civil government of Rome; but his jurisdiction has been reduced to a narrow compass; and in the days of freedom, the right or exercise was derived from the senate and people. IV. After the revival of the senate,<sup>b</sup> the conscript fathers (if I may use the expression) were invested with the legislative and executive power; but their views seldom

* In his twenty-seventh dissertation on the Antiquities of Italy (tom. II, p. 529-569), Muratori exhibits a series of the senatorial coins, which bear the obscure names of efficiarii, refectarii, providarii, pagarii. During this period all the popes, without exception Boniface VIII, abstained from the right of coining, which was resumed by his successor Benedict XII, and regularly exercised in the court of Avignon.

† A German historian, Gerard of Reichenberg (in Baluz. Miscell. tom. v, p. 64, apud Schmidt, Hist. des Allemands, tom. III, p. 743), thus describes the constitution of Rome in the eleventh century: Grandibus urbis et nobilibus legibus spectant ad Romanum pontificem; itemque ad Romanum imperatorem; sed illis clarum urbis prefectum, qui de sui dignitate respectu utriusque, videlicet domini populi cui sunt homines, et domini imperatorum a quo accipit sui potestatis insignes, seduct gladium exercitum.

a. a. 1194-1216.

Number and chosen of the senate.

* The words of a contemporary writer (Pandolph. Flors. in VII. Pandual ii. p. 331, 332) describe the election and oath of the prefect in 1119, Inconsultis patribus . . . loca prefectoria . . . Laudes prefecturæ . . . committorum splendorem . . . juramentum populo in auctoritate sublevarunt . . . confirmant eum in robe prefecturæ potest.

<sup>a</sup> Gesta prefectum ad ligam fidelitatem recevit, et per sacramentum quod illi donavit de prefecturâ eum publice investivit, qui inquit ad id tempus juramentum fidelitatis imperatori fecit diligens et ab eo prefecturam tenuit hactenus (Gesta Innocent iii. in Muratori. tom. iii. p. 1. p. 487.)

<sup>b</sup> See Otto Freising. Chron. vii. 31, de Gert. Frederic i. l. 4. c. 27.

CHAP.
LXIX.

reached beyond the present day; and that day was most frequently disturbed by violence and tumult. In its utmost plenitude, the order or assembly consisted of fifty-six senators,<sup>2</sup> the most eminent of whom were distinguished by the title of counsellors: they were nominated, perhaps annually, by the people; and a previous choice of their electors, ten persons in each region, or parish, might afford a basis for a free and permanent constitution. The popes, who in this tempest submitted rather to bend than to break, confirmed, by treaty, the establishment and privileges of the senate, and expected from time, peace, and religion, the restoration of their government. The motives of public and private interest might sometimes draw from the Romans an occasional and temporary sacrifice of their claims; and they renewed their oath of allegiance to the successor of St. Peter and Constantine, the lawful head of the church and the republic.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Our countryman, Roger Hoveden, speaks of the single senators, of the Capuan family, &c. quorum temporibus nomus regebatur Romanus quatuor sunt (i. e. 1194) est imperatoribus vel senatorem (Ducange, Gloss. tom. VI, p. 101, Senatores).

<sup>3</sup> Muratori (diSSERT. III, tom. III, p. 755-758) has published an original treaty: Concordia inter D. nostrum papam Clementem III, et senatum populi Romani super regulis et aliis acquisitionibus, &c. anno 44<sup>to</sup> senatus. The senate speaks, and speaks with authority: Resoluit ad justitiam . . . habebimus . . . salute presbyteria . . . juramentum pacem et fidelitatem, &c. A charter of Tenenentius Tolentani, dated in the forty-seventh year of the same era, and confirmed decrees augustissimi ordinis senatus, acclamatione P. R. publice Capituli romanensis. It is there we find the difference of senatores consiliiarii and simple senators (Muratori, diSSERT. III, tom. III, p. 761-765).

CHAP.
LXIX.The office of senator.

The union and vigour of a public council was dissolved in a lawless city; and the Romans soon adopted a more strong and simple mode of administration. They condensed the name and authority of the senate in a single magistrate, or two colleagues; and, as they were changed at the end of a year, or of six months, the greatness of the trust was compensated by the shortness of the term. But in this transient reign, the senators of Rome indulged their avarice and ambition; their justice was perverted by the interest of their family and faction; and as they punished only their enemies, they were obeyed only by their adherents. Anarchy, no longer tempered by the pastoral care of their bishop, admonished the Romans that they were incapable of governing themselves; and they sought abroad those blessings which they were hopeless of finding at home. In the same age, and from the same motives, most of the Italian republics were prompted to embrace a measure, which, however strange it may seem, was adapted to their situation, and productive of the most salutary effects.* They chose, in some foreign but friendly city, an impartial magistrate of noble birth and unblemished character, a soldier and a statesman, recommended by the voice of fame and his country, to whom they delegated, for a time, the supreme administration of peace and war. The compact * Historical Sketches, xlv, torn. iv, p. 64-97, has fully explained this mode of government; and the Oculus Patrocinis, which he has given at the end, is a treatise or sermon on the duties of these foreign magistrates.

CHAP.
LXIX.

between the governor and the governed was sealed with oaths and subscriptions; and the duration of his power, the measure of his stipend, the nature of their mutual obligations, were defined with scrupulous precision. They swore to obey him as their lawful superior; he pledged his faith to unite the indifference of a stranger with the zeal of a patriot. At his choice, four or six knights and civilians, his assessors in arms and justice, attended the podestà,* who maintained, at his own expence, a decent retinue of servants and horses; his wife, his son, his brother, who might bias the affections of the judge, were left behind; during the exercise of his office, he was not permitted to purchase land, to contract an alliance, or even to accept an invitation in the house of a citizen; nor could he honourably depart till he had satisfied the complaints that might be urged against his government.

Reynolds,
A.D. 1252-
1258.

It was thus, about the middle of the thirteenth century, that the Romans called from Bologna the senator Brancalcione,<sup>b</sup> whose fame and merit have been rescued from oblivion by the pen of an English historian. A just anxiety for his reputation, a clear foresight of the difficulties of the

* In the Latin writers, at least of the silver age, the title of podestà was transferred from the office to the magistrate.

Hicque est tribunus potestatis noster inquit 1

An Placuitque Substantiusque esse populum

Quintus, Satir. 2, 293.

<sup>b</sup> See the life and death of Brancalcione, in the Historia Major of Matthew Paris, p. 141, 147, 192, 193, 199, 210, 222, 232, 236, 240. The multitude of pilgrims and soldiers converted Rome and St. Alban's; and the resentment of the English clergy prompted them to rejoice whenever the pope were humbled and oppressed.

task, had engaged him to refuse the honour of their choice; the statutes of Rome were suspended, and his office prolonged to the term of three years. By the guilty and licentious he was accused as cruel; by the clergy he was suspected as partial; but the friends of peace and order applauded the firm and upright magistrate by whom those blessings were restored; no criminals were so powerful as to brave, so obscure as to elude, the justice of the senator. By his sentence, two nobles of the Annibaldi family were executed on a gibbet; and he inexorably demolished, in the city and neighbourhood, one hundred and forty towers, the strong shelters of rapine and mischief. The bishop, as a simple bishop, was compelled to reside in his diocese; and the standard of Brancalione was displayed in the field with terror and effect. His services were repaid by the ingratitude of a people unworthy of the happiness which they enjoyed. By the public robbers, whom he had provoked for their sake, the Romans were excited to depose and imprison their benefactor; nor would his life have been spared, if Bolognan had not possessed a pledge for his safety. Before his departure, the prudent senator had required the exchange of thirty hostages of the noblest families of Rome; on the news of his danger, and at the prayer of his wife, they were more strictly guarded; and Bologna, in the cause of honour, sustained the thunders of a papal interdict. This generous resistance allowed the Romans to compare the present with the past; and Brancalione was conducted from the prison to the capitol amidst the accla-

CHAP.
LXIX.

mations of a repentant people. The remainder of his government was firm and fortunate; and as soon as envy was appeased by death, his head, enclosed in a precious vase, was deposited on a lofty column of marble.*

Charles of Anjou,
A. D. 1268-
1278.

The impotence of reason and virtue recommended in Italy a more effectual choice; instead of a private citizen, to whom they yielded a voluntary and precarious obedience, the Romans elected for their senator some prince of independent power, who could defend them from their enemies and themselves. Charles of Anjou and Provence, the most ambitious and warlike monarch of the age, accepted at the same time the kingdom of Naples from the pope, and the office of senator from the Roman people.<sup>a</sup> As he passed through the city, in his road to victory, he received their oath of allegiance, lodged in the Lateran palace, and smoothed in a short visit the harsh features of his despotic character. Yet even Charles was exposed to the inconstancy of the people, who saluted with the same acclamations

* Matthew Paris thus ends his account: Caput vero ipsius Brancasensis in vase pretioso super marmoream columnam collocatum, in algenteo autem velato et prebetato, quæ reliquias, imperatorem hinc et postquam sustulerant. Fuerat enim imperatorum potentium et maledictorum, ubi malorum et contritorum, et populi precum et dolorem, virtutis et justitie imitator et minor (p. 140). A biographer of Innocent IV. (Muratori, script. rom. iii. p. 1, p. 581, 582) draws a less favourable picture of this Ghibelline senator.

<sup>a</sup> The election of Charles of Anjou to the office of perpetual senator of Rome is mentioned by the historians in the eighth volume of the collection of Muratori, by Nicholas de Juvilla (p. 373), the monk of Padua (p. 724), Eodem Malaspina II. 2, c. 9, p. 308, and Eodem Malaspina c. 117, p. 379.

the passages of his rival, the unfortunate Conradin; and a powerful avenger, who reigned in the capitol, alarmed the fears and jealousy of the popes. The absolute term of his life was superseded by a renewal every third year; and the enmity of Nicholas the third obliged the Sicilian king to abdicate the government of Rome: In his bull, a perpetual law, the imperious pontiff asserts the truth, validity, and use, of the donation of Constantine, not less essential to the peace of the city than to the independence of the church; establishes the annual election of the senator; and formally disqualifies all emperors, kings, princes, and persons of an eminent and conspicuous rank.* This prohibitory clause was repealed in his own behalf by Martin the fourth,† who humbly solicited the suffrage of the Romans. In the presence, and by the authority, of the people, two electors conferred, not on the pope, but on the noble and faithful Martin, the dignity of senator, and the supreme administration of the republic,‡ to hold during his natural life, and to exercise at pleasure by himself or his deputies. About fifty years afterwards, the same title was granted to the emperor Lewis of Bavaria; and the liberty of Rome was acknowledged by her

Pope Martin IV,
A. D. 1294.

The emperor
Lewis of Bavaria,
A. D. 1329.

* The high-sounding bull of Nicholas III, which founds his temporal sovereignty on the donation of Constantine, is still extant; and as it has been inserted by Boniface VIII in the Sexte of the Decretals, it must be received by the catholics, or at least by the papists, as a sacred and perpetual law.

† I am indebted to Fleury (Hist. Eccles. tom. XIII, p. 306) for an extract of this Roman act, which he has taken from the Ecclésiastical Annals of Odoarius Raynaldus, t. v. 1291, No. 14, 15.

CHAP.
LXIX.

Address of Rome to the superiors.

Conrad III.
a. d. 1144.

two sovereigns, who accepted a municipal office in the government of their own metropolis.

In the first moments of rebellion, when Arnold of Brescia had inflamed their minds against the church, the Romans artfully laboured to conciliate the favour of the empire, and to recommend their merit and services in the cause of Caesar. The style of their ambassadors to Conrad the third and Frederic the first is a mixture of flattery and pride, the tradition and the ignorance of their own history.* After some complaint of his silence and neglect, they exhort the former of these princes to pass the Alps, and assume from their hands the imperial crown. "We beseech your majesty, not " to disdain the humility of your sons and vas-
" sals, not to listen to the accusations of our " common enemies, who calumniate the senate as " hostile to your throne, who sow the seeds of " discord, that they may reap the harvest of " destruction. The pope and the Sicilian are " united in an impious league to oppose our li" berty and your coronation. With the bless" ing of God, our zeal and courage has hither" to defeated their attempts. Of their power" ful and factious adherents, more especially
" the Frangipani, we have taken by assault
" the houses and turrets: some of these are * These letters and speeches are preserved by Otto bishop of Frisingen (Patric. Biblion. Lat. med. et infim. tom. v. p. 186, 197), perhaps the noblest of historians: he was son of Leopold seargant of Austria; his mother, Agnes, was daughter of the emperor Henry IV. and he was half brother and uncle to Conrad III. and Frederic I. He has left, in seven books, a Chronicle of the Times; in two, the Gesta Frederici; the last of which is inserted in the sixth volume of Muratori's historians.

" occupied by our troops, and some are levelled " with the ground. The Milvian bridge, which " they had broken, is restored and fortified for " your safe passage; and your army may enter
 " the city without being annoyed from the castle
 " of St. Angelo. All that we have done, and all " that we design, is for your honour and service,
 " in the loyal hope, that you will speedily appear
 " in person, to vindicate those rights which have " been invaded by the clergy, to revive the dig" nity of the empire, and to surpass the fame and " glory of your predecessors. May you fix your " residence in Rome, the capital of the world;
 " give laws to Italy and the Teutonic kingdom;
 " and imitate the example of Constantine and
 " Justinian,<sup>k</sup> who, by the vigour of the senate
 " and people, obtained the sceptre of the earth."<sup>l</sup>
 But these splendid and fallacious wishes were not cherished by Conrad the Franconian, whose eyes were fixed on the Holy land, and who died without visiting Rome soon after his return from the Holy land.

His nephew and successor, Frederic Barbarossa, <sup>Frederic I.,</sup> was more ambitious of the imperial crown; nor <sup>a. 1154</sup> had any of the successors of Otho acquired such absolute sway over the kingdom of Italy. Surrounded by his ecclesiastical and secular princes, he gave audience in his camp at Sutri to the ambassadors of Rome, who thus addressed him in a

<sup>k</sup> We desire (said the ignorant Romans) to restore the empire to eum statum, quo fuit tempore Constantini et Justiniani, qui totius orbem vigore senatus et populi Romani suis tantum manibus.

<sup>l</sup> Otho Frising. de Gestis Frederici I., l. 1, c. 99, p. 662-664.

CHAP.
LXIX.

free and florid oration : " Incline your ear to the " queen of cities ; approach with a peaceful and " friendly mind the precincts of Rome, which " has cast away the yoke of the clergy, and is " impatient to crown her legitimate emperor.
" Under your auspicious influence, may the pri" mitive times be restored. Assert the prerogatives of the eternal city, and reduce under " her monarchy the insolence of the world. You " are not ignorant, that, in former ages, by the " wisdom of the senate, by the valour and discipline of the equestrian order, she extended her
" victorious arms to the East and West, beyond
" the Alps, and over the islands of the ocean.
" By our sins, in the absence of our princes,
" the noble institution of the senate has sunk in
" oblivion ; and with our prudence, our strength
" has likewise decreased. We have revived the " senate and the equestrian order : the counsels
" of the one, the arms of the other, will be devoted to your person and the service of the " empire. Do you not hear the language of the " Roman matron ? You were a guest, I have " adopted you as a citizen ; a Transalpine stranger, I have elected you for my sovereign ;<sup>a</sup> and " given you myself and all that is mine. Your " first and most sacred duty is to swear and " subscribe that you will shed your blood for
" the republic ; that you will maintain in peace
" and justice the laws of the city and the charters
" of your predecessors ; and that you will reward

<sup>a</sup> Hæcæ eras, civem feci. Advenæ fuisse ex Transalpinis partibus : principem constitui,

" with five thousand pounds of silver, the faithful
 " senators who shall proclaim your titles in the " capitol. With the name, assume the character, " of Augustus." The flowers of Latin rhetoric were not yet exhausted; but Frederic, impatient of their vanity, interrupted the orators in the high tone of royalty and conquest. " Famous indeed " have been the fortitude and wisdom of the " ancient Romans; but your speech is not sen" sioned with wisdom, and I could wish that " fortitude were conspicuous in your actions.
 " Like all sublunary things, Rome has felt the vi" cissitudes of time and fortune. Your noblest " families were translated to the East, to the " royal city of Constantine; and the remains of " your strength and freedom have long since " been exhausted by the Greeks and Franks.
 " Are you desirous of beholding the ancient glory
 " of Rome, the gravity of the senate, the spirit " of the knights, the discipline of the camp, the " valour of the legions? you will find them in " the German republic. It is not empire, naked
 " and alone; the ornaments and virtues of em" pire have likewise migrated beyond the Alps
 " to a more deserving people.<sup>1</sup> They will be em" ployed in your defence, but they claim your " obedience. You pretend that myself or my " predecessors have been invited by the Romans;
 " you mistake the word; they were not invited;
 " they were implored. From its foreign and <sup>1</sup> Non cessat adhuc nostrum imperium, virtute sua unctum venit, ornamenta sua posuit traxit. Penes nos sunt consules tui, &c. Thiers or Livy would not have rejected these images, the stupours of a barbarian, born and educated in the Hairyman street.

CHAP.
LXIX.

"domestic tyrants, the city was rescued by "Charlemagne and Otho, whose ashes repose in "our country; and their dominion was the price
 "of your deliverance. Under that dominion
 "your ancestors lived and died. I claim by the "right of inheritance and possession, and who "shall dare to extort you from my hands? Is the "hand of the Franks* and Germans enfeebled
 "by age? Am I vanquished? Am I a captive?
 "Am I not encompassed with the banners of a "potent and invincible army? You impose con"ditions on your master; you require oaths: if "the conditions are just, an oath is superfluous;
 "if unjust, it is criminal. Can you doubt my "equity? It is extended to the meanest of my "subjects. Will not my sword be unsheathed in "the defence of the capitol? By that sword the "northern kingdom of Denmark has been re"stored to the Roman empire. You prescribe
 "the measure and the objects of my bounty,
 "which flows in a copious but a voluntary stream.
 "All will be given to patient merit; all will be "denied to rude importunity."† Neither the emperor nor the senate could maintain these lofty pretensions of dominion and liberty. United with the pope, and suspicious of the Romans, Frederic continued his march to the Vatican:
 his coronation was disturbed by a sally from the * Otho of Frisingen, who surely understood the language of the court and diet of Germany, speaks of the Franks in the twelfth century as the reigning nation (Proceres Franci, equites Franci, magni Francorum); he adds, however, the epithet of Teutonici.

† Otho Frising. de Gestis Frederici i, l. ii. c. 22, p. 716-721. These original and authentic acts I have translated and abridged with freedom, yet with fidelity.

capitol; and if the numbers and valour of the Germans prevailed in the bloody conflict, he could not safely encamp in the presence of a city of which he styled himself the sovereign. About twelve years afterwards, he besieged Rome, to seat an antipope in the chair of St. Peter; and twelve Pisan galleys were introduced into the Tyber; but the senate and people were saved by the arts of negociation and the progress of disease; nor did Frederic or his successors reiterate the hostile attempt. Their laborious reigns were exercised by the popes, the crusades, and the independence of Lombardy and Germany; they courted the alliance of the Romans; and Frederic the second offered in the capitol the great standard, the Caroccia of Milan.* After the extinction of the house of Swabia, they were banished beyond the Alps; and their last coronations betrayed the impotence and poverty of the Teutonic Cæsars.†

* From the chronicles of Ricobaldo and Francis Pepin, Muratori (diSSERT. xxvi., tom. ii., p. 492) has transcribed this curious fact, with the doggerel verses that accompanied the gift.

Ave decus vobis ave t. vixit tibi destinatus, ave t.

Curus ab Augusto Frederico Cæsare iunctus.

Vae Medicinam! jam vultu spectare vultum

Imperii vices, propitius tibi tollere vices.

Ergo triumphorum vrbis potes membra esse precium

Quis tibi mittebant reges qui bella gerabant.

Ne si des tueri (I saw in the Italian dissertation, tom. i., p. 444) the wall anno 1727, una copia dello Caroccio in marmo dianzi ignota al sepolcral Campidoglio, presso alle carcere di quel luogo, dove Sisto V. l'aveva fatto rinchiudere. Stava esso posto sopra quattro colonne di marmo fino sopra seguente iscrizione, &c. to the same purpose as the old inscription.

† The decline of the imperial arms and authority in Italy is related with impartial learning in the Annals of Muratori (tom. i., li., xxi.)

sqd

CHAP.
LXIX.

Wars of the Romans
against the neighbouring cities.

Under the reign of Adrian, when the empire extended from the Euphrates to the ocean, from mount Atlas to the Grampian hills, a fanciful historian<sup>a</sup> amused the Romans with the picture of their infant wars. "There was a time," says Florus, "when Tibur and Præneste, our summer retreats, were the objects of hostile vows in the capitol, when we dreaded the shades of the Arician groves, when we could triumph without a blush over the nameless villages of the Sabines and Latins, and even Corioli could afford a title not unworthy of a victorious general." The pride of his contemporaries was gratified by the contrast of the past with the present: they would have been humbled by the prospect of futurity: by the prediction, that after a thousand years, Rome, despoiled of empire, and contracted to her primæval limits, would renew the same hostilities, on the same ground which was then decorated with her villas and gardens. The adjacent territory on either side of the Tyber was always claimed, and sometimes possessed, as the patrimony of St. Peter; but the barons assumed a lawless independence, and the cities too faithfully copied the revolt and discord of the metropolis. In the twelfth and thirteenth cen-and the reader may compare his narrative with the Histoire des Alpes, tome III, iv, by Schmidt, who has deserved the esteem of his countrymen.

<sup>a</sup> Tibur nunc suburbanum, et intra Præneste delictis, nunquam in capitolis vultu periclitatur. The whole passage of Florus (l. i. c. II) may be read with pleasure, and has deserved the praise of a man of genius (Œuvres de Montesquieu, tom. III, p. 624, 625, quæsto edition).

turies, the Romans incessantly laboured to reduce or destroy the contumacious vassals of the church and senate; and if their headstrong and selfish ambition was moderated by the pope, he often encouraged their zeal by the alliance of his spiritual arms. Their warfare was that of the first consuls and dictators, who were taken from the plough. They assembled in arms at the foot of the capitol; sallied from the gates, plundered or burnt the harvests of their neighbours, engaged in tumultuary conflict, and returned home after an expedition of fifteen or twenty days. Their sieges were tedious and unskillful: in the use of victory, they indulged the meaner passions of jealousy and revenge; and instead of adopting the valour, they trampled on the misfortunes, of their adversaries. The captives, in their shirts, with a rope round their necks, solicited their pardon: the fortifications, and even the buildings, of the rival cities, were demolished, and the inhabitants were scattered in the adjacent villages. It was thus that the seats of the cardinal bishops, Porto, Ostia, Albanum, Tusculum, Praeneste, and Tibur or Tivoli, were successively overthrown by the ferocious hostility of the Romans.* Of these,

* Ne a feritate Romanorum sicut fuerant Hostilienses, Portuenses, Tusculanenses, Albanenses, Laticlavianenses, et nuper Tiburtini, decemgentur (Matthew Paris, p. 757). These events are noticed in the Annals and Index (the eighteenth volume) of Morisani.

* For the state or ruin of these suburban cities, the reader of the Tyler, &c. see the lively picture of the P. Latini. (Voyage en France et en Italie), who had not long resided in the neighbourhood of Rome; and the more accurate description of which P. Eckhard (Roma, 1736, in octavo) has added to the topographical map of Cingolani.

CHAP.
LXIX.

Porto and Ostia, the two keys of the Tyber, are still vacant and desolate: the marshy and unwholesome banks are peopled with herds of buffaloes, and the river is lost to every purpose of navigation and trade. The hills, which afford a shady retirement from the autumnal heats, have again smiled with the blessings of peace: Pescati has arisen near the ruins of Tusculum: Tibur or Tivoli has resumed the honour of a city,<sup>1</sup> and the meaner towns of Albano and Palestrina are decorated with the villas of the cardinals and princes of Rome. In the work of destruction, the ambition of the Romans was often checked and repulsed by the neighbouring cities and their allies: in the first siege of Tibur, they were driven from their camp; and the battles of Tusculum<sup>2</sup> and Viterbo<sup>3</sup> might be compared, in their relative state, to the memorable fields of Thrasymene and Cannæ. In the first of these petty wars, thirty thousand Romans were overthrown by a thousand German horse, whom Frederic Barbarossa had detached to the relief of Tusculum; and if we number the slain at three, the prisoners at two, thousand, we shall embrace the most authentic and moderate account. Sixty-eight years after-

Battle of Tusculum,
A. D. 1167.

<sup>1</sup> Label (Ann. lit. p. 233) mentions a recent decree of the Roman Government, which has severely punished the pride and poverty of Tivoli: in elevate Tiberina non videtur civitatem.

<sup>2</sup> I depart from my usual method, of quoting only by the date the annals of Mitrovic, in consideration of the critical balance in which he has weighed nine contemporary writers, who mention the battle of Tusculum (Ann. x. p. 42-44).

<sup>3</sup> Matthew Paris, p. 343. This bishop of Winchester was Peter de Rupina, who occupied the see thirty-two years (A. D. 1204-1235), and is described, by an English historian, as a soldier and a statesman (p. 174, 309).

ward they marched against Viterbo in the ecclesiastical state with the whole force of the city: by a rare coalition the Teutonic eagle was blended, in the adverse banners, with the key of St. Peter; and the pope's auxiliaries were commanded by a count of Thoulouse and a bishop of Winchester. The Romans were discomfited with shame and slaughter; but the English prelate must have indulged the vanity of a pilgrim, if he multiplied their numbers to one hundred, and their loss in the field to thirty thousand men. Had the policy of the senate, and the discipline of the legions, been restored with the capitol, the divided condition of Italy would have offered the fairest opportunity of a second conquest. But in arms, the modern Romans were not above, and in arts they were far below, the common level of the neighbouring republics. Nor was their warlike spirit of any long continuance: after some irregular sallies, they subsided in the national apathy, in the neglect of military institutions, and in the disgraceful and dangerous use of foreign mercenaries.

CHAP.
LXIX.

.....
Battle of Viterbo,
A. D. 1254.

Ambition is a weed of quick and early vegetation in the vineyard of Christ. Under the first christian princes, the chair of St. Peter was disputed by the votes, the venality, the violence, of a popular election: the sanctuaries of Rome were polluted with blood; and, from the third to the twelfth century, the church was distracted by the mischief of frequent schisms. As long as the final appeal was determined by the civil magistrate, these mischiefs were transient and local: the merits were tried by equity or favour; nor could the

The close that of the popes.

CHAP.
LXIX.

Right of the cardinals confirmed by Alexander
III.

unsuccessful competitor long disturb the triumph of his rival. But after the emperors had been divested of their prerogatives, after a maxim had been established, that the vicar of Christ is amenable to no earthly tribunal, each vacancy of the holy see might involve Christendom in controversy and war. The claims of the cardinals and inferior clergy, of the nobles and people, were vague and litigious: the freedom of choice was overruled by the tumults of a city that no longer owned or obeyed a superior. On the decease of a pope, two factions proceeded in different churches to a double election: the number and weight of votes, the priority of times, the merit of the candidates, might balance each other: the most respectable of the clergy were divided; and the distant princes, who bowed before the spiritual throne, could not distinguish the spurious, from the legitimate, idol. The emperors were often the authors of the schism, from the political motive of opposing a friendly to an hostile pontiff; and each of the competitors was reduced to suffer the insults of his enemies, who were not awed by conscience: and to purchase the support of his adherents, who were instigated by avarice or ambition. A peaceful and perpetual succession was ascertained by Alexander the third,† who finally abolished the tumultuary votes of the clergy and people; and defined the right of election in the sole college of cardinals.* The three orders of CHAP. LXIX.

† See Mehusim, Institut. Hist. Ecclesiast. p. 401, 402. Alexander himself had nearly been the victim of a contested election: and the doubtful merits of Innocent had only preponderated by the weight of genius and burning which St. Bernard cast into the scale (see his life and writings).

 bishops, priests, and deacons, were assimilated to each other by this important privilege: the parochial clergy of Rome obtained the first rank in the hierarchy; they were indifferently chosen among the nations of Christendom; and the possession of the richest benefices, of the most important bishoprics, was not incompatible with their title and office. The senators of the catholic church, the coadjutors and legates of the supreme pontiff, were robed in purple, the symbol of martyrdom or royalty; they claimed a proud equality with kings; and their dignity was enhanced by the smallness of their number, which, till the reign of Leo the tenth, seldom exceeded twenty or twenty-five persons. By this wise regulation, all doubt and scandal were removed, and the root of schism was so effectually destroyed, that in a period of six hundred years, a double choice has only once divided the unity of the sacred college. But as the concurrence of two thirds of the votes had been made necessary, the election was often delayed by the private interest and passions of the cardinals; and while they prolonged their independent reign, the christian world was left destitute of an head. A vacancy of almost three years had preceded the elevation of Gregory the tenth, who resolved to prevent testification of the concern by Gregory 10.

 a. p. 1274.

* The origin, titles, importances, dress, precedence, &c. of the Roman cardinals, are very amply discussed by Thomassin (Discipline de l'Eglise, tom. 1, p. 1262-1267. but their people is now much faded. The sacred college was raised to the noblest number of seventy-two, to represent, under his vicar, the disciples of Christ.

CHAP.
LXIX.

the future abuse; and his bull, after some opposition, has been consecrated in the code of the canon law.* Nine days are allowed for the obsequies of the deceased pope, and the arrival of the absent cardinals; on the tenth, they are imprisoned, each with one domestic, in a common apartment or conclave, without any separation of walls or curtains; a small window is reserved for the introduction of necessaries; but the door is locked on both sides, and guarded by the magistrates of the city, to seclude them from all correspondence with the world. If the election be not consummated in three days, the luxury of their tables is contracted to a single dish at dinner and supper; and after the eighth day, they are reduced to a scanty allowance of bread, water, and wine. During the vacancy of the holy see, the cardinals are prohibited from touching the revenues, or assuming, unless in some rare emergency, the government, of the church; all agreements and promises among the electors are formally annulled; and their integrity is fortified by their solemn oath and the prayers of the catholics. Some articles of inconvenient or superfluous rigour have been gradually relaxed, but the principle of confinement is vigorous and entire; they are still urged, by the personal motives of health and freedom, to accelerate the moment of their deliverance; and the improvement of ballot or secret votes has wrapt the struggles of the conclave<sup>b</sup> in the silky veil of charity and politeness.* By these institutions, the Romans were excluded from the election of their prince and bishop; and in the fever of wild and precarious liberty, they seemed insensible of the loss of this inestimable privilege. The emperor Lewis of L. E. 1332. Bavaria revived the example of the great Otho. After some negociation with the magistrates, the Roman people was assembled<sup>d</sup> in the square before St. Peter's; the pope of Avignon, John the twenty-second, was deposed; the choice of his successor was ratified by their consent and applause. They freely voted for a new law, that their bishop should never be absent more than three months in the year, and two days journey from the city; and that if he neglected to re-

* See the bull of Gregory x., apostolicum sacro concilio, in the Sexte of the Canon Law (l. 1. tit. 6. c. 2), a supplement to the Decretals, which Boniface viii. promulgated at Rome in 1298, and addressed to all the universities of Europe.

* The giving of cardinal de Retz had a right to point a conclave (of 1665), in which he was a spectator and an actor (Mémoires, torn. iv, p. 15-57); but I am at a loss to appreciate the knowledge or authority of an anonymous Italian, whose history (Conclavi de Pontifici Romani, in quarto, 1667) has been continued since the reign of Alexander vii. The accidental form of the work furnishes a lesson, though not an antidote, to ambition. From a labyrinth of intrigues, we emerge to the admission of the successful candidate; but the next page opens with his funeral.

<sup>a</sup> The expressions of cardinal de Retz are positive and picturesque: On y reçut toujours ensemble avec le même respect, et la même civilité que l'on observe dans le cabinet des rois, avec la même politesse qu'on avoit dans la cour de Henri iv., avec la même familiarité que l'on voit dans les collèges; avec la même modestie, qui se remarque dans les évêques; et avec la même charité, du moins en apparence, qui pourroit être entre des frères parfaitement unis.

<sup>b</sup> Recliamus per bando (says John Villani) senatori di Roma, « 27 del popolo, et capitani de' 25 e consoili (consoli) », et 13 buoni uomini, uno per rione. Our knowledge is too imperfect to pronounce how much of this constitution was temporary, and how much ordinary and permanent. Yet it is faintly illustrated by the ancient statutes of Rome.

CHAP.
LXIX.

turn on the third summons, the public servant should be degraded and dismissed.* But Lewis forgot his own debility and the prejudices of the times: beyond the precincts of a German camp, his useless phantom was rejected; the Romans despised their own workmanship; the antipope implored the mercy of his lawful sovereign;† and the exclusive right of the cardinals was more firmly established by this unseasonable attack.

Absence of the popes
from Rome.

Had the election been always held in the Vatican, the rights of the senate and people would not have been violated with impunity. But the Romans forgot, and were forgotten, in the absence of the successors of Gregory the seventh, who did not keep as a divine precept their ordinary residence in the city and diocese. The care of that diocese was less important than the government of the universal church; nor could the popes delight in a city in which their authority was always opposed, and their person was often endangered. From the persecution of the emperors, and the wars of Italy, they escaped beyond the Alps into the hospitable bosom of France; from the tumults of Rome they prudently withdrew to live * Villani (l. 2, c. 66-71 in Muratori, Script. tom. xiii, p. 611-615) relates this law, and the whole transaction, with much less abhorrence than the prudent Muratori. Any one conversant with the darker ages must have observed how much the name (I mean the nonsense) of superstition is frightening and influential.

† In the first volume of the Popes of Avignon, see the second original Life of John xxii, p. 142-143, the confession of the antipope, p. 143-152, and the laborious notes of Baluz, p. 714, 715.

and die in the more tranquil stations of Anagni, Perugia, Viterbo, and the adjacent cities. When the flock was offended or impoverished by the absence of the shepherd, they were recalled by a stern admonition that St. Peter had fixed his chair, not in an obscure village, but in the capital of the world; by a ferocious menace that the Romans would march in arms to destroy the place and people that should dare to afford them a retreat. They returned with timorous obedience; and were saluted with the account of an heavy debt, of all the losses which their desertion had occasioned, the hire of lodgings, the sale of provisions, and the various expences of servants and strangers who attended the court.* After a short interval of peace, and perhaps of authority, they were again banished by new tumults, and again summoned by the imperious or respectful invitation of the senate. In these occasional retreats, the exiles and fugitives of the Vatican were seldom long, or far, distant from the metropolis; but in the beginning of the fourteenth century the apostolic throne was transported, as it might seem for ever, from the Tyber to the Rhône; and the cause of the transmigration may be deduced from * Romani autem non valentes nec volentes ultra mun celare cupiditatem gravissimum contra papam morere coeperunt questionem, exigentes ab eo urgentissime omnia que subierant per ejus absentiam damna et jacturas, videlicet in hospitio secunda, in mercimoniis, in tenuis, in redditibus, in provisionibus, et in aliis modis innumrabilibus. Quod cum audisset papa, precordialiter ingemuit et ac compunctum municipalem, &c. Mail. Paris, p. 257. For the ordinary history of the popes, their life and death, their residence and absence, it is enough to refer to the ecclesiastical annals, Spelman and Fleury.

CHAP.
LXIX.

*****
Boniface
VIII.
A. D. 1294.
1303.

the furious contest between Boniface the eighth and the king of France.* The spiritual arms of excommunication and interdict were repulsed by the union of the three estates, and the privileges of the Gallican church; but the pope was not against the carnal weapons which Philip the fair had courage to employ. As the pope resided at Anagni, without the suspicion of danger, his palace and person were assaulted by three hundred horse, who had been secretly levied by William of Nogaret, a French minister, and Sciarra Colonna, of a noble but hostile family of Rome. The cardinals fled; the inhabitants of Anagni were seduced from their allegiance and gratitude; but the dauntless Boniface, unarmed and alone, seated himself in his chair, and awaited, like the conscript fathers of old, the swords of the Gauls. Nogaret, a foreign adversary, was content to execute the orders of his master: by the domestic enmity of Colonna, he was insulted with words and blows; and during a confinement of three days his life was threatened by the hardships which they inflicted on the obstinacy which they provoked. Their strange delay gave time and courage to the adherents of the church, who rescued him from sacrilegious violence; but his imperious soul was wounded in a vital part; and Boniface expired at Rome in a frenzy of rage and revenge.

* Besides the general historians of the church of Italy and of France, we possess a valuable fragment composed by a learned friend of Thomas, which his last and best editors have published in the appendix (Histoire particulière du grand Différend entre Boniface VIII. et Philippe le Bel, par Pierre du Puy, tom. vii. p. 21, p. 61-87).

His memory is stained with the glaring vices of avarice and pride; nor has the courage of a martyr promoted this ecclesiastical champion to the honours of a saint; a magnanimous sinner (say the chronicles of the times), who entered like a fox, reigned like a lion, and died like a dog. He was succeeded by Benedict the eleventh, the mildest of mankind. Yet he excommunicated the impious emissaries of Philip, and devoted the city and people of Anagni by a tremendous curse, whose effects are still visible to the eyes of superstition.<sup>1</sup>

After his decease, the tedious and equal suspense of the conclave was fixed by the dexterity of the French faction. A specious offer was made and accepted, that, in the term of forty days, they would elect one of the three candidates who should be named by their opponents. The archbishop of Bourdeaux, a furious enemy of his king and country, was the first on the list; but his ambition was known; and his conscience obeyed the calls of fortune and the commands of a benefactor, who had been informed by a swift messenger that the choice of a pope was now in his hands. The terms were regulated in a private interview; and with such speed and secrecy was the business transacted, that the unanimous conclave applauded the elevation of Clement the fifth.<sup>2</sup> The Translation of the holy see to Avignon,

A. D. 1309.

<sup>1</sup> It is difficult to know whether Labat (tom. iv. p. 53-57) be in jest or in earnest, when he supposes that Anagni still feels the weight of this curse, and that the corn fields, or vineyards, or olive trees, are annually blasted by nature, the obsequious household of the popes.

<sup>2</sup> See in the Chronicle of Giovanni Villani (l. viii. c. 63, 64, 65, in Muratori, tom. xiii) the imprisonment of Boniface VIII. and the election of Clement V. the last of which, like most anecdotes, is embarrassed with some difficulties.

CHAP.
LXIX.

cardinals of both parties were soon astonished by a summons to attend him beyond the Alps ; from whence, as they soon discovered, they must never hope to return. He was engaged, by promise and affection, to prefer the residence of France ; and, after dragging his court through Poitou and Gascony, and devouring, by his expence, the cities and convents on the road, he finally reposed at Avignon,<sup>1</sup> which flourished above seventy years<sup>2</sup> the seat of the Roman pontiff and the metropolis of Christendom. By land, by sea, by the Rhône, the position of Avignon was on all sides accessible ; the southern provinces of France do not yield to Italy itself ; new palaces arose for the accommodation of the pope and cardinals ; and the arts of luxury were soon attracted by the treasures of the church. They were already possessed of the adjacent territory, the Vemissin county,<sup>3</sup> a

<sup>1</sup> The original lives of the eight popes of Avignon, Clement v., John xiii., Benedict xii., Clement vi., Innocent vi., Urban v., Gregory xi., and Clement vii., are published by Stephen Baluze (Vite Paparum Avinionensium : Paris 1693, 2 vols. in 8to.) with copious and elaborate notes, and a second volume of acts and documents. With the true zeal of an editor and a patriot, he devoutly justifies or excuses the characters of his countrymen.

<sup>2</sup> The exile of Avignon is compared by the Italians with Babylon and the Babylonish captivity. Such florid metaphors, more suitable to the ardour of Petrarch than to the judgment of Muratori, are gravely related in Baluze's preface. The abbé de Sade is distracted between the love of Petrarch and of his country : Yet he modestly pleads that many of the local inconveniences of Avignon are now removed ; and many of the vices against which the poet declaimed, had been imported with the Roman court by the strangers of Italy (Quin. i. p. 22-23).

<sup>3</sup> The county Venaisin was ceded to the popes in 1273 by Philip iii. king of France, after he had inherited the dominions of the count of Toulouse. Forty years before, the barony of count Raymond had given them populous and fertile spot; and the sovereignty of Avignon was afterwards purchased from the youth and distress of Jane, the first queen of Naples and countess of Provence, for the inadequate price of fourscore thousand florins.* Under the shadow of the French monarchy, amidst an obedient people, the popes enjoyed an honourable and tranquil state, to which they long had been strangers: but Italy deplored their absence; and Rome, in solitude and poverty, might repent of the ungovernable freedom which had driven from the Vatican the successor of St. Peter. Her repentance was tardy and fruitless: after the death of the old members, the sacred college was filled with French cardinals,<sup>b</sup> who beheld Rome and Italy with abhorrence and contempt, and perpetuated a series of national, and even provincial, popes, attached by the most indissoluble ties to their native country.

them a pretence of science, and they derived some obscure claim from the eleventh century to some lands near Rhodanus (Valeut Notitia Galliarum, p. 439, 610. Longinus, Description de la France, tom. 3, p. 379-381).

* If a possession of four centuries were not itself a title, such objections might avail the bargain: but the purchase-money must be unlimited, for indeed it was paid. Civitates Arvernorum erant . . . per ejusmodi traditionem pecuniâ redundantem, &c. (Ida Vita Clementis vi, in Baluz. tom. 1, p. 272. Muratori, Script. tom. iii, p. 6, p. 565). The only temptation for Jane and her second husband was ready money, and without it they could not have returned to the throne of Naples.

<sup>b</sup> Clement v immediately promoted ten cardinals, nine French and one English (Vita 4ta, p. 63, et Baluz. p. 635, &c.). In 1321, the pope refused two candidates recommended by the king of France, quod ex Cardinalibus, de quibus xvii de Regno Francie ordinare tractare presuntur in memorato collegio existant (Thomassin, Discipline de l'Eglise, tom. 1, p. 1261).

CHAP.
LXIX.

*****
Institution of the jubilee or holy year.
A. D. 1300.

The progress of industry had produced and enriched the Italian republics: the era of their liberty is the most flourishing period of population and agriculture, of manufactures and commerce; and their mechanic labours were gradually refined into the arts of elegance and genius. But the position of Rome was less favourable, the territory less fruitful; the character of the inhabitants was debased by indolence and elated by pride; and they fondly conceived that the tribute of subjects must for ever nourish the metropolis of the church and empire. This prejudice was encouraged in some degree by the resort of pilgrims to the shrines of the apostles; and the last legacy of the popes, the institution of the holy year,<sup>a</sup> was not less beneficial to the people than to the clergy. Since the loss of Palestine, the gift of plenary indulgences, which had been applied to the crusades, remained without an object; and the most valuable treasure of the church was sequestered above eight years from public circulation. A new channel was opened by the diligence of Boniface the eighth, who reconciled the vices of ambition and avarice; and the pope had sufficient learning to recollect and revive the secular games, which were celebrated in Rome at the conclusion of every century. To sound without danger the depth of popular credulity, a sermon was seasonably pronounced, a report was artfully scattered, some aged witnesses were produced; and on the first of January of the year thirteen hundred, the church of St. Peter was crowded with the faithful, who demanded the customary indulgence of the holy time. The pontiff, who watched and irritated their devout impatience, was soon persuaded by ancient testimony of the justice of their claim; and he proclaimed a plenary absolution to all catholics who, in the course of that year, and at every similar period, should respectfully visit the apostolic churches of St. Peter and St. Paul. The welcome sound was propagated through Christendom; and at first from the nearest provinces of Italy, and at length from the remote kingdoms of Hungary and Britain, the highways were thronged with a swarm of pilgrims who sought to expiate their sins in a journey, however costly or laborious, which was exempt from the perils of military service. All exceptions of rank or sex, of age or infirmity, were forgotten in the common transport; and in the streets and churches many persons were trampled to death by the eagerness of devotion. The calculation of their numbers could not be easy nor accurate; and they have probably been magnified by a dextrous clergy, well apprised of the contagion of example; yet we are assured by a judicious historian, who assisted at the ceremony, that Rome was never replenished with less than two hundred thousand strangers; and another spectator has fixed at two millions the total concourse of the year. A trifling oblation from each individual would accumulate a royal treasure; and two priests

<sup>a</sup> Our primitive account is from cardinal James Caietan (Maxima Religio. Patrum, tom. 2. p. 77) and I am at a loss to determine whether the impulse of Boniface was to a fall or a revival: the work is a much clearer character.

CHAP.
LXIX.

stood night and day, with rakes in their hands, to collect, without counting, the heaps of gold and silver that were poured in the altar of St. Paul.<sup>2</sup> It was fortunately a season of peace and plenty; and if forage was scarce, if inns and lodgings were extravagantly dear, an inexhaustible supply of bread and wine, of meat and fish, was provided by the policy of Boniface and the venal hospitality of the Romans. From a city without trade or industry, all casual riches will speedily evaporate: but the avarice and envy of the next generation solicited Clement the sixth<sup>3</sup> to anticipate the distant period of the century. The gracious pontiff complied with their wishes; afforded Rome this poor consolation for his loss; and justified the change by the name and practice of the mosaic jubilee.<sup>4</sup> His summons was obeyed; and the number, zeal, and liberality of the pilgrims did not yield to the primitive festival. But they encountered the triple scourge of war, pestilence, and famine: many wives and virgins were violated in the castles of Italy; and many strangers were pillaged or mur-

The second jubilee,
A. D. 1350.

<sup>2</sup> See John Villani (l. viii, c. 36) to the 12th, and the Chronicon Astense, in the 11th volume (p. 191, 192) of Muratori's Collection, Papa innumerablem pecuniam ab eisdem accepit, nam duo clerici, cum castris, &c.

<sup>3</sup> The two bulls of Boniface viii and Clement vi, are inserted in the Corpus Juris Canonici (Extravagant. Commun. l. v, tit. 14, c. 1, 2).

<sup>4</sup> The sabbath years and jubilee of the mosaic law (Ex. Signa, de Republica Hebraeorum, Opp. tom. iv, l. iii, c. 14, 15, p. 151, 152), the suspension of all care and labour, the periodical release of debts, servitude, &c. may seem a noble idea; but the execution would be impracticable in a profane republic; and I should be glad to learn that this ruinous festival was observed by the Jewish people.

dered by the savage Romans, no longer moderated by the presence of their bishop.* To the impatience of the popes we may ascribe the successive reduction to fifty, thirty-three, and twenty-five years; although the second of these terms is commensurate with the life of Christ. The profusion of indulgences, the revolt of the protestants, and the decline of superstition, have much diminished the value of the jubilee; yet even the nineteenth and last festival was a year of pleasure and profit to the Romans; and a philosophic smile will not disturb the triumph of the priest or the happiness of the people.<sup>2</sup>

In the beginning of the eleventh century, Italy was exposed to the feudal tyranny, alike oppressive to the sovereign and the people. The rights of human nature were vindicated by her numerous republics, who soon extended their liberty and dominion from the city to the adjacent country. The sword of the nobles was broken; their slaves were enfranchised; their castles were demolished; they assumed the habits of society and obedience; their ambition was confined to municipal honours, and in the proudest aristocracy of Venice or Genoa, each patrician was subject or lessons

The golden
of Rome.

* See the Chronicle of Matteo Villani (l. 1, c. 36) in the fourteenth volume of Muratori, and the Mémoires sur la Vie de Pétrarque, tom. III, p. 75-80.

<sup>2</sup> The subject is exhausted by M. Chais, a French minister at the Hague, in his Lettres Historiques et Dogmatiques, sur les abus et les Indulgences; la Haye, 1731, 3 vols. in 12mo; an elaborate and pleasing work; had not the author preferred the character of a polemic to that of a philosopher.

CHAP.
LXIX.

to the laws.<sup>2</sup> But the feeble and disorderly government of Rome was unequal to the task of curbing her rebellious sons, who scorned the authority of the magistrate within and without the walls. It was no longer a civil contention between the nobles and plebeians for the government of the state; the barons asserted in arms their personal independence; their palaces and castles were fortified against a siege; and their private quarrels were maintained by the numbers of their vassals and retainers. In origin and affection, they were aliens to their country;<sup>3</sup> and a genuine Roman, could such have been produced, might have renounced these haughty strangers, who disclaimed the appellation of citizens, and proudly styled themselves the princes of Rome.<sup>4</sup> After a dark series of revolutions, all records of pedigree were lost; the distinction of surnames were abolished; the blood of the nations was mingled in a thousand channels; and the Goths and Lombards, the Greeks and Franks, the Germans and Normans, had obtained the fairest possessions by royal bounty or the prerogative of valour. These examples might be readily presumed; but the elevation of an Hebrew race to the rank of senators and consuls, is an event without a parallel in the long captivity of these miserable exiles.<sup>a</sup> In the time of Leo the ninth, a wealthy and learned Jew was converted to christianity, and honoured at his baptism with the name of his godfather, the reigning pope. The zeal and courage of Peter the son of Leo were signified in the cause of Gregory the seventh, who entrusted his faithful adherent with the government of Adrian's mole, the tower of Crescentius, or, as it is now called, the castle of St. Angelo. Both the father and the son were the parents of a numerous progeny; their riches, the fruits of usury, were shared with the noblest families of the city; and so extensive was their alliance, that the grandson of the proselyte was exalted by the weight of his kindred to the throne of St. Peter. A majority of the clergy and people supported his cause: he reigned several years in the Vatican, and it is only the eloquence of St. Bernard, and the final triumph of Innocent the second, that has branded Anacletus with the epithet of antipope. After his defeat and death, the posterity of Leo is no longer conspicuous; and none will be found of the modern nobles am-

<sup>2</sup> Muratori (Dissert. xlvi.) alleges the Annals of Florence, Pidius, Guizot, &c. the analogy of the test, the evidence of Otto of Frisingen (de Gest. Frick. v. l. ii. c. 13), and the submission of the municipal of Rome.

<sup>3</sup> As early as the year 824, the emperor Lothaire found it expedient to interrogate the Roman people, to learn from each individual by what national law he chose to be governed (Muratori, Dissert. xlii.).

<sup>4</sup> Petrarck attacks these foreigners, the tyrants of Rome, in a declaration or epistle, full of bold truths and absurd pedantry, in which he applies the maxim, and exact prophecies, of the old republic to the state of the fourteenth century (Memories, tom. iii. p. 137-169).

Family of Leo the Jew.

<sup>a</sup> The origin and adventures of this Jewish family are united by Pagi (Critica, tom. iv. p. 435, s. n. 1124, No. 3, 4), who draws his information from the Chronographus Maurigniacensis, and Arzulpheus Saguenus de Schlemme (in Muratori, Scripta Ital. tom. lii. p. i. p. 423-432). The fact must in some degree be true; yet I could wish that it had been exactly related, before it was turned into a resource against the antipope.

CHAP.
LXIX.

bitious of descending from a Jewish stock. It is not my design to enumerate the Roman families which have failed at different periods, or those which are continued in different degrees of splendor to the present time.* The old consular line of the Frangipani discover their name in the generous act of breaking or dividing bread in a time of famine; and such benevolence is more truly glorious than to have enclosed, with their allies the Corti, a spacious quarter of the city in the chains of their fortifications: the Savelli, as it should seem a Sabine race, have maintained their original dignity; the absolute surname of the Capitacchi is inscribed on the coins of the first senators; the Conti preserve the honour, without the estate, of the counts of Signia: and the Anniibaldi must have been very ignorant, or very modest, if they had not descended from the Carthaginian hero.<sup>4</sup>

The Co-
lonia.

But among, perhaps above, the peers and princes of the city, I distinguish the rival houses

* Muratori has given two dissertations (xli and xlii) to the names, surnames, and families of Italy. Some nobles, who glory in their domestic fallow, may be offended with his firm and temperate criticism; yet surely some ounces of pure gold are of more value than many pounds of base metal.

<sup>4</sup> The cardinal of St. George, in his pastoral, or rather metrical history of the election and coronation of Boniface viii (Muratori, Script. Ital. tom. iii, p. 1, p. 341, &c.), describes the state and families of Rome at the coronation of Boniface viii (a. m. 1293).

Interea stans redinctis sanguine at armis
Illustresque viri Romanæ a stirpe trabunt
Nomen in imperitos tantæ virtutis domus
Intulerat in modum festinusque colant Auratis fulgentes toga sociantæ easteri.

of Colonna and Ursini, whose private story is an essential part of the annals of modern Rome. CHAP. LXIX.
1. The name and arms of Colonna* have been the theme of much doubtful etymology; nor have the orators and antiquarians overlooked either Trajan's pillar, or the columns of Hercules, or the pillar of Christ's flagellation, or the luminous column that guided the Israelites in the desert. Their first historical appearance in the year eleven hundred and four, attests the power and antiquity, while it explains the simple meaning, of the name. By the usurpation of Cava, the Colonna provoked the arms of Paschal the second; but they lawfully held, in the Campagna of Rome, the hereditary fiefs of Zagarola and Colonna; and the latter of these towns was probably adorned with some lofty pillar, the relic of a villa or temple.† They likewise possessed one moiety of the neighbouring city of Tusculum; a strong presumption of their descent from the counts

*Ex ipsa devota domus prestantia ab Urbe
Ecclesie, volumineque fidei meritissimo altum
Fuit Colonna petra, necnon sepulchra iustis;
Scipionibus iuris, Cicerone, Andronicis pudor, Perforatusque sedis sanguine sine viribus amant.*
II. II. c. 2, 100, p. 647, 648.

The ancient statues of Rome (l. iii. c. 59, p. 174, 175) distinguished eleven families of patricians, who are obliged to swear in capitulum comitum, before the senator, that they would not harbour or protect any manufacturers, outlaws, &c.—a terrible security.

* It is pity that the Colonna themselves have not favoured the world with a complete and critical history of their illustrious house. I adhere to Matrucci (Diemerz, 1760, tom. iii. p. 647, 648).

† Pandolfo Plaza in VII. Paschal. ii. in Manzoni, Script. Ital. tom. ii. p. 1, p. 335. The family has still great possessions in the Campagna of Rome; but they have alienated to the Respublica this original fief of Colonna (Zachmann, p. 258, 259).

CHAP.
LXIX.

of Tusculum, who in the tenth century were the tyrants of the apostolic see. According to their own and the public opinion, the primitive and remote source was derived from the banks of the Rhine;<sup>a</sup> and the sovereigns of Germany were not ashamed of a real or fabulous affinity with a noble race, which in the revolutions of seven hundred years has been often illustrated by merit, and always by fortune.<sup>b</sup> About the end of the thirteenth century, the most powerful branch was composed of an uncle and six brothers, all conspicuous in arms, or in the honours of the church. Of these, Peter was elected senator of Rome, introduced to the capitol in a triumphant car, and hailed in some vain acclamations with the title of Caesar; while John and Stephen were declared marquis of Ancona and count of Romagna by Nicholas the fourth, a patron so partial to their family, that he has been delineated, in satirical portraits, imprisoned as it were in a hollow pillar.<sup>c</sup> After his decease, their haughty

* To longinqua dedit tellus et pacem Rheni, says Petrarch; and, in 1447, a duke of Guelders and Juliers acknowledges (Lefebvre, Hist. du Comté de Constance, tom. II, p. 339) his descent from the ancestors of Mastia or (Otho Colonna); but the royal author of the Memoirs of Brandenburg observes, that the sceptre in his arms has been confounded with the column. To maintain the Roman origin of the Colonna, it was ingeniously supposed (Dietrich di Mendenhall, in the Script. Hist. tom. 15, p. 623), that a cousin of the emperor Nero escaped from the city, and founded Meutz in Germany.

<sup>b</sup> I cannot overlook the Roman triumph or oration of Marco Antonio Colonna, who had commanded the pope's gallies at the naval victory of Lepanto (Tassin. Hist. l. 7, tom. III, p. 55, 56. Muratori's Opp. tom. I, p. 180-189).

<sup>c</sup> Muratori, Annali d'Italia, tom. 2, p. 316, 320.

behaviour provoked the displeasure of the most implacable of mankind. The two cardinals, the uncle and the nephew, denied the election of Boniface the eighth; and the Colonna were oppressed for a moment by his temporal and spiritual arms.<sup>1</sup> He proclaimed a crusade against his personal enemies: their estates were confiscated; their fortresses on either side of the Tyber were besieged by the troops of St. Peter and those of the rival nobles; and after the ruin of Palestrina or Praeneste, their principal seat, the ground was marked with a ploughshare, the emblem of perpetual desolation. Degraded, banished, proscribed, the six brothers, in disguise and danger, wandered over Europe without renouncing the hope of deliverance and revenge. In this double hope, the French court was their surest asylum: they prompted and directed the enterprise of Philip; and I should praise their magnanimity, had they respected the misfortune and courage of the captive tyrant. His civil acts were annulled by the Roman people, who restored the honours and possessions of the Colonna; and some estimate may be formed of their wealth by their losses, of their losses by the damages of one hundred thou-

<sup>1</sup> Petrarch's attachment to the Colonna, has authorised the abbé de Sade to expatiate on the state of the family in the fourteenth century, the persecution of Boniface VIII, the character of Sciarra and his sons, their quarrels with the Pope, &c. (Mémoires sur Pétrarque, tom. I. p. 98-110, 116-128, 174-175, 222-230, 274-280). His reflections often rectify the hearsay stories of Villani, and the errors of the less diligent historians. I understand the treaty of Trepian to be now extinct.

CHAP.
LXIX.
*****

and gold florins which were granted them against the accomplices and heirs of the deceased pope. All the spiritual censures and disqualifications were abolished by his prudent successors; and the fortune of the house was more firmly established by this transient hurricane. The boldness of Sciarra Colonna was signalised in the captivity of Boniface, and long afterwards in the coronation of Lewis of Bavaria; and by the gratitude of the emperor, the pillar in their arms was encircled with a royal crown. But the first of the family in fame and merit was the elder Stephen, whom Petrarch loved and esteemed as an hero superior to his own times, and not unworthy of ancient Rome. Persecution and exile displayed to the nations his abilities in peace and war; in his distress he was an object, not of pity but of reverence; the aspect of danger provoked him to avow his name and country: and when he was asked, "where is now your fortress?" he laid his hand on his heart, and answered, "here." He supported with the same virtue the return of prosperity; and till the ruin of his declining age, the ancestors, the character, and the children of Stephen Colonna, exalted his dignity in the Roman republic, and at the court and Council of Avignon. 11. The Ursini migrated from Spo-

<sup>1</sup> Alexander III had deposed the Colonna who adhered to the emperor Frederick I, incapable of holding any ecclesiastical benefice (Villani, l. v. c. 1): and the last stains of excommunicated were purified by Sixtus V (Vila di Sion v, tom. III. p. 416). Treason, exile, proscription, are often the best titles of ancient nobility.

leto;<sup>28</sup> the sons of Ursus, as they are styled in CISAP. LXIX.
the twelfth century, from some eminent person, who is only known as the father of their race.
But they were soon distinguished among the nobles of Rome, by the number and bravery of their kinsmen, the strength of their towers, the honours of the senate and sacred college, and the elevation of two popes, Celestin the third and Nicholas the third, of their name and lineage.*
Their riches may be accused as an early abuse of nepotism: the estates of St. Peter were alienated in their favour by the liberal Celestin;† and Nicholas was ambitious for their sake to solicit the alliance of monarchs; to found new kingdoms in Lombardy and Tuscany; and to invest them with the perpetual office of senators of Rome. All that has been observed of the greatness of the Co-

—Vallis te proxima misit

Appenninigenæ quæ præta virentia zylæ

Spoliata metum armenta greges prætere.

Monaldeschi (tom. xii, Script. Ital. p. 553) gives the Ursini a French origin, which may be remotely true.

* In the metrical life of Celestin i, by the cardinal of St. George (Muratori, tom. iii, p. 1, p. 613, &c.), we find a luminous, and not insignificant, passage (l. 1, v. 3, p. 203, &c.):

—geniit quem nobilis Urus (Ursi ?)

Progenies, Romano domus, veteratque magni

Facibus in clero, pomposaque experta senatû,

Bellorumque manû grandi stipata pernixum

Cardineos splens inter fastigia dadam

Papath iterata tenens.

Muratori (Dissert. iii, tom. xiii, p. ) observes, that the first Ursini possessor of Celestin's iii was unknown: he is inclined to read Ursi progenies.

* Fili Ursi, quondam Celestini pape nepotes, de bonis ecclesie Romanæ diviti (Vit. Innocent iii, in Muratori, Script. tom. iii, p. 6). The partial prodigality of Nicholas iii is more conspicuous in Villani and Muratori. Yet the Ursini would diminish the nephews of a modern pope.

CHAP.
LXIX.

Their hereditary feuds.

lonna, will likewise redound to the glory of the Ursini, their constant and equal antagonists in the long hereditary feud, which distracted above two hundred and fifty years the ecclesiastical state. The jealousy of pre-eminence and power was the true ground of their quarrel; but as a specious badge of distinction, the Colonna embraced the name of Ghibelines and the party of the empire; the Ursini espoused the title of Guelphs and the cause of the church. The eagle and the keys were displayed in their adverse banners; and the two factions of Italy most furiously raged when the origin and nature of the dispute were long since forgotten.* After the retreat of the popes to Avignon, they disputed in arms the vacant republic; and the mischiefs of discord were perpetuated by the wretched compromise of electing each year two rival senators. By their private hostilities, the city and country were desolated, and the fluctuating balance inclined with their alternate success. But none of either family had fallen by the sword, till the most renowned champion of the Ursini was surprised and slain by the younger Stephen Colonna.† His triumph is stained with the reproach of violating the truce; their defeat was basely avenged by the assassination, before the church-door, of an innocent boy and his two servants. Yet the victorious Co-

* In his fifty-first Dissertation on the Italian Antiquities, Muratori explains the factions of the Guelphs and Ghibelines.

† Petrarch (Rom. l. p. 272-273) has celebrated this victory according to the Colonna; but two contemporaries, a Florentine (Giovanni Villani, l. 3, c. 230) and a Roman (Lodovico Mehus, p. 408, 434), are less favourable to their arms.

lonna, with an annual colleague, was declared CHAP.
senator of Rome during the term of five years. LXX.
And the muse of Petrarch inspired a wish, a hope, a prediction, that the generous youth, the son of his venerable hero, would restore Rome and Italy to their pristine glory; that his justice would extirpate the wolves and lions, the serpents and bears, who laboured to subvert the eternal basis of the marble column.*

* The abbé de Sade Dom- L. uster, p. 61-66) has applied the sixth custom of Petrarch, Sperio Gentil, &c. to Stephen Colonna the younger :

Oce, lupi, leoni, aquile e serpi.
Ad una gran marmorea colonna
Fanno noja uento e à se danno.

CHAP. LXX.

Character and coronation of Petrarch.—Restoration of the freedom and government of Rome by the tribune Ricci.—His virtues and vices, his expulsion and death.—Return of the popes from Avignon.—Great schism of the West.—Re-union of the Latin church.—Last struggles of Roman liberty.—Statutes of Rome.—Final settlement of the ecclesiastical state.

CHAP.
LXX.

Petrarch,
A. D. 1304,
June 15.
A. D. 1374,
July 19.

IN the apprehension of modern times, Petrarch* is the Italian songster of Laura and love. In the harmony of his Tuscan rhymes, Italy applauds, or rather adores, the father of her lyric poetry; and his verse, or at least his name, is repeated by the enthusiasm, or affectation of amorous sensibility. Whatever may be the private taste of a stranger, his slight and superficial knowledge should humbly acquiesce in the taste of a learned nation: yet I may hope or presume, that the Italians do not compare the tedious uniformity of sonnets and elegies, with the sublime

* The Mémoires are la Vie de François Pétrarque (Amsterdam, 1764, 1767, 3 vols. in 4to) form a copious, original, and entertaining work, a labour of love, composed from the accurate study of Petrarch and his contemporaries; but the hero is too often lost in the general history of the age, and the author too often languishes in the effusion of politeness and gallantry. In the preface to his first volume, he enumerates and weighs twenty Italian biographers, who have professedly treated of the same subject.

compositions of their epic muse, the original wildness of Dante, the regular beauties of Tasso, and the boundless variety of the incomparable Ariosto. The merits of the lover I am still less qualified to appreciate; nor am I deeply interested in a metaphysical passion for a nymph so shadowy, that her existence has been questioned;<sup>2</sup> for a matron so prolific,<sup>3</sup> that she was delivered of eleven legitimate children,<sup>4</sup> while her amorous swain sighed and sung at the fountain of Vaucluse.<sup>5</sup> But in the eyes of Petrarch, and those of his graver contemporaries, his love was a sin, and Italian verse a frivolous amusement. His Latin works of philosophy, poetry, and eloquence, established his serious reputation, which was soon diffused from Avignon over France and

<sup>2</sup> The allegorical interpretation prevailed in the fifteenth century; but the wise commentators were not agreed whether they should understand by Laura, religion, or virtue, or the blessed virgin, or

<sup>3</sup> Laura de Noves, born about the year 1307, was married, in January 1325, to Hugues de Sade, a noble citizen of Avignon, whose jealousy was not the effect of love, since he married a second wife within seven months of her death, which happened the 6th of April 1348, precisely one-and-twenty years after Petrarch had seen and loved her.

<sup>4</sup> Corpus ex libris patribus estimatum: from one of these is borrowed, in the tenth degree, the abbé de Sade, the fond and grateful biographer of Petrarch: and this domestic motive must probably suggested the idea of his work, and urged him to enquire into every circumstance that could affect the history and character of his grandmother (see particularly tom. i. p. 122-123, notes, p. 7-38, tom. ii. p. 435-494, not. p. 76-87).

<sup>5</sup> Vaucluse, so familiar to our English travellers, is described from the writings of Petrarch, and the local knowledge of his biographer (Mémoires, tom. i. p. 340-349). It was, in truth, the retreat of an hermit, and the moderns are much mistaken, if they place Laura and an happy lover in the grotto.

CHAP.
LXX.

Italy : his friends and disciples were multiplied in every city : and if the ponderous volume of his writings<sup>a</sup> be now abandoned to a long repose, our gratitude must applaud the man, who by precept and example revived the spirit and study of the Augustan age. From his earliest youth, Petrarch aspired to the poetic crown. The academical honours of the three faculties had introduced a royal degree of master or doctor in the art of poetry ;<sup>b</sup> and the title of poet-laurent, which custom, rather than vanity, perpetuates in the English court,<sup>c</sup> was first invented by the Cæsars of Germany. In the musical games of antiquity, a prize was bestowed on the victor ;<sup>d</sup>

<sup>a</sup> Of 1500 pages, in a close print, at Basil in the sixteenth century, but without the date of the year. The abbé de Sade calls aloud for a new edition of Petrarch's Latin works ; but I much doubt whether it would redound to the profit of the bookseller, or the amusement of the public.

<sup>b</sup> Consult Selden's Titles of Honour, in his works (vol. III. p. 437-440). An hundred years before Petrarch, St. Francis received the title of a poet, quia ab imperatore fuit coronatus et calceis rex versutus doctus.

<sup>c</sup> From Augustus to Louis, the house has too often been false and venal ; but I much doubt whether any age or court can produce a singular establishment of a stipendiary poet, who in every reign, and at all events, is bound to furnish twice a year a measure of praise and verse, such as may be sung in the chapel, and, I believe, in the presence of the sovereign. I speak the more freely, as the best time for abolishing this ridiculous custom, is while the prince is a man of virtue, and the poet a man of genius.

<sup>d</sup> Isocrates (in Panegyrics, tom. I. p. 116, 117, edit. Hættig, Cantab. 1729) claims for his native Athens the glory of first instituting and recommending the games and the noble prizes for poets, καὶ ποιεῖν καὶ λέγειν, καὶ ἄλλοι καὶ ἄλλοι καὶ ἄλλοι. The example of the Pantheon was imitated at Delphi ; but the Olympic games were ignorant of a musical crown, till it was extorted by the cruel tyranny of Nero (Sueton. in Nero, c. 23 ; Philostratus, apud Casaubonum ad Iocum ; Dion Cassius, or Xiphilius, l. lxxv, p. 1022, 1061. Potter's Greek Antiquities, vol. I. p. 445, 460).

the belief that Virgil and Horace had been crowned in the capitol inflamed the emulation of a Latin bard;<sup>1</sup> and the laurel<sup>2</sup> was endeared to the lover by a verbal resemblance with the name of his mistress. The value of either object was enhanced by the difficulties of the pursuit; and if the virtue or prudence of Laura was inexorable,<sup>3</sup> he enjoyed, and might boast of enjoying, the nymph of poetry. His vanity was not of the most delicate kind, since he applauds the success of his own labours; his name was popular; his friends were active; the open or secret opposition of envy and prejudice was surmounted by the dexterity of patient merit. In the thirty-sixth year of his age, he was solicited to accept the object of his wishes; and on the same day, in the solitude of Vaucluse, he received a similar and solemn invitation from the senate of Rome and the university of Paris. The learning of a theological school, and the ignorance of a <sup>1</sup> The Capitoline games (certamen quinquennale, musices, equestre, gymnicum) were instituted by Domitian (Sexton. c. 4) in the year of Christ 86 (Cassiod. de Div. Natali, c. 18, p. 100, edit. Havercamp), and were not abolished in the fourth century (Ammian. de Profectibus Burdigal. x). If the crown was given to superior merit, the exaltation of Statius (capitola nostrae indicata lyre, Sylv. l. iii, v. 31) may do honour to the games of the capitol; but the Latin poets who lived before Diocletian were crowned only in the public opinion.

<sup>2</sup> Petrarch and the senators of Rome were ignorant that the laurel was not the Capitoline, but the Delphic, crown (Plin. Hist. Natur. xv, 39. Hist. Critique de la République des Lettres, tom. 4, p. 150-220). The victors in the capitol were crowned with a garland of oak leaves (Martial, l. iv, epigram 54).

<sup>3</sup> The pious grandeur of Laura has laboured, and not without success, to vindicate her immaculate chastity against the censures of the grave and the sneers of the profane (tom. ii, notes, p. 76-83).

CHAP.
LXX.

~~~~~

lawless city, were alike unqualified to bestow the ideal though immortal wreath which genius may obtain from the free applause of the public and of posterity; but the candidate dismissed this troublesome reflection, and after some moments of complacency and suspense, preferred the summons of the metropolis of the world.

His poetic coronation
at Rome,
A.D. 1311,
April 8.

The ceremony of his coronation* was performed in the capitol by his friend and patron the supreme magistrate of the republic. Twelve patrician youths were arrayed in scarlet; six representatives of the most illustrious families, in green robes, with garlands of flowers, accompanied the procession: in the midst of the princes and nobles, the senator, count of Anguillara, a kinsman of the Colonna, assumed his throne; and at the voice of an herald Petrarch arose. After discoursing on a text of Virgil, and thrice repeating his vows for the prosperity of Rome, he knelt before the throne, and received from the senator a laurel crown, with a more precious declaration, "This is the reward of merit." The people shouted "long life to the capitol and the poet!" A sonnet in praise of Rome was accepted as the effusion of genius and gratitude; and after the whole procession had visited the Vatican, the profane wreath was suspended before the shrine of St. Peter. In the act of diploma, which was presented to Petrarch, the title and prerogatives of poet laureat are revived in the capitol, after the lapse of thirteen hundred years; and he receives the perpetual privilege of wearing, at his choice, a crown of laurel, ivy, or myrtle, of assuming the poetic habit, and of teaching, disputing, interpreting, and composing, in all places whatsoever, and on all subjects of literature. The grant was ratified by the authority of the senate and people; and the character of citizen was the recompence of his affection for the Roman name. They did him honour, but they did him justice. In the familiar society of Cicero and Livy, he had imbibed the ideas of an ancient patriot; and his ardent fancy kindled every idea to a sentiment, and every sentiment to a passion. The aspect of the seven hills and their majestic ruins confirmed these lively impressions; and he loved a country by whose liberal spirit he had been crowned and adopted. The poverty and debasement of Rome excited the indignation and pity of her grateful son: he dissembled the faults of his fellow-citizens; applauded with partial fondness the last of their heroes and matrons; and in the remembrance of the past, in the hope of the future, was pleased to forget the miseries of the present time. Rome was still the lawful mistress of the world: the pope and the emperor, her bishop and general, had abdicated their station by an inglorious retreat to the Rhône and the Danube; but if she could resume her virtue, the republic might again vindicate her liberty and dominion. Amidst the

* The whole process of Petrarch's coronation is accurately described by the abbé de Sade (tom. i, p. 422-435, tom. ii, p. 1-6, notes p. 1-13) from his own writings, and the Roman diary of Ludovico Menaldeschi, without mixing in this authentic narrative the more recent fables of Sannozzo Delbene.

* The original act is printed among the Pieces Justificatives in the Memoires sur Petrarque, tom. iii, p. 29-33.

CHAP.
LXX.

CHAP.
LXX.

indulgence of enthusiasm and eloquence.* Petrarch, Italy, and Europe, were astonished by a revolution which realized for a moment his most splendid visions. The rise and fall of the tribune Rienzi will occupy the following pages;† the subject is interesting, the materials are rich, and the glance of a patriot-heart will sometimes vivify the copious, but simple, narrative of the Florentine,‡ and more especially of the Roman,§ historian.

* To find the proofs of his enthusiasm for Rome, I need only request that the reader would open, by chance, either Petrarch, or his French biographer. The latter has described the poet's first visit to Rome (tom. i. p. 323-333). But in the place of much idle ceremony and smoothness, Petrarch might have shown the present and future eye with an original account of the city and his corruption.

† It has been treated by the pen of a Jesuit, the P. du Cerceau, whose posthumous work (Conjuration de Nicolas Gabrini, dit de Régent Tyran de Rome, en 1347) was published at Paris 1748, in 12mo. I am indebted to him for some facts and documents in John Hoeserius, canon of Laige, a contemporary historian (Publium, Bilibis, Lat. med. ævi, tom. iii. p. 373, tom. iv. p. 85).

‡ The abbé de Stade, who is freely capricious on the history of the fourteenth century, might treat as his proper subject a revolution in which the heart of Petrarch was so deeply engaged (Mémoires, tom. II. p. 30, 31, 330-417, notes, p. 70-76, tom. III. p. 221-243, 306-375). Not an idea or a fact in the writings of Petrarch has probably escaped him.

§ Giovanni Villani, l. iii. c. 89, 104, in Muratori, Rerum Italicarum Scriptores, tom. xiii. p. 969, 970, 981-983.

‡ In his third volume of Italian antiquities (p. 240-316), Muratori has inserted the Fragmenta Historie Romanæ ab anno 1327 usque ad annum 1334, in the original dialect of Rome or Naples in the fourteenth century, and a Latin version for the benefit of strangers. It contains the most particular and authentic life of Cola (Nicholas) di Rienzi; which had been printed at Bracciano 1627, in 4to. under the name of Tomaso Fortibacra, who is only mentioned in this work as having been punished by the tribune for forgery. Human nature is scarcely

CHAP.
LXX.

Birth, character, and parental designs of Rienzi.

In a quarter of the city which was inhabited only by mechanics and Jews, the marriage of an innkeeper and a washerwoman produced the future deliverer of Rome.* From such parents Nicholas Rienzi Cahirini could inherit neither dignity nor fortune; and the gift of a liberal education, which they painfully bestowed, was the cause of his glory and untimely end. The study of history and eloquence, the writings of Cicero, Seneca, Livy, Caesar, and Valerius Maximus, elevated above his equals and contemporaries the genius of the young plebeian: he perused with indefatigable diligence the manuscripts and marbles of antiquity; loved to dispense his knowledge in familiar language; and was often provoked to exclaim, "Where are now these Romans? their virtue, their justice, their power? why was I not born in those happy times?" When the correctly capable of such sublime or stupid impartiality; but whoever is the author of these fragments, he wrote on the spot and at the time, and painted, without design or art, the manners of Rome and the character of the tribune.

* The first and splendid period of Rienzi, his tribunician government, is contained in the eighteenth chapter of the Fragmenta (pp. 369-479), which, in the new division, forms the second book of the history in 38 smaller chapters or sections.

† The reader may be pleased with a specimen of the original Italian: Fo da sua juvenutine nutrito di latte de eloquentia, bono grammatico, migliore rettorico, autorista latina. Del cramo et quanto era valora letore! molti usava Tito Livio, Seneca, et Tullio, et Valerio Massimo, moito il dilettava le magnificentie di Julio Cesare raccontare. Tutta la die se specolava negl' intagli di marmo le quali lancia intorno Roma. Non era altri che nno, che sapena legera il antiehi patelli. Tutte scritture antiche vulgarizava; quome fare di marmo justamente interpretava. Oh come spesso diceva, "Dove nno quelli buoni Romani? dove enalora forma justitia? poteremmo trovare in tempo che quasi Euliano!"

CHAP.
LXX.
.....

republic addressed to the throne of Avignon an embassy of the three orders, the spirit and eloquence of Rienzi recommended him to a place among the thirteen deputies of the commons. The orator had the honour of haranguing pope Clement the sixth, and the satisfaction of conversing with Petrarch, a congenial mind; but his aspiring hopes were chilled by disgrace and poverty; and the patriot was reduced to a single garment and the charity of the hospital. From this misery he was relieved by the sense of merit or the smile of favour; and the employment of apostolic notary afforded him a daily stipend of five gold florins, a more honourable and extensive connection; and the right of contrasting, both in words and actions, his own integrity with the vices of the state. The eloquence of Rienzi was prompt and persuasive: the multitude is always prone to envy and censure: he was stimulated by the loss of a brother and the impunity of the assassins; nor was it possible to excuse or exaggerate the public calamities. The blessings of peace and justice, for which civil society has been instituted, were banished from Rome: the jealous citizens, who might have endured every personal or pecuniary injury, were most deeply wounded in the dishonour of their wives and daughters; they were equally oppressed by the arrogance of the nobles and the corruption of the magistrates; and the abuse of arms or of laws was the only circumstance that distinguished the lions from the dogs and serpents of the capitol. These allegorical emblems were variously repeated in the pictures which Rienzi exhibited in the streets and churches; and while the spectators gazed with curious wonder, the bold and ready orator unfolded the meaning, applied the satire, inflamed their passions, and announced a distant hope of comfort and deliverance. The privileges of Rome, her eternal sovereignty over her princes and provinces, was the theme of his public and private discourse; and a monument of servitude became in his hands a title and incentive of liberty. The decree of the senate, which granted the most ample prerogatives to the emperor Vespasian, had been inscribed on a copperplate still extant in the choir of the church of St. John Lateran.* A numerous assembly of nobles and plebeians was invited to this political lecture, and a convenient theatre was erected for their reception. The notary appeared, in a magnificent and mysterious habit, explained the inscription by a version and commentary,† and despatched with eloquence and zeal on the ancient glories of the senate and people, from whom all legal authority was derived. The supine igno-

* Petrarch compares the jealousy of the Romans with the easy temper of the husbands of Avignon (Memoires, tom. 1, p. 330).

* The fragments of the Lex Regia may be found in the Inscriptions of Græver, tom. i. p. 242, and at the end of the Tacitus of Ernesti, with some learned notes of the editor, tom. ii.

† I cannot overlook a stupendous and laughable blunder of H. anel. The Lex Regia empowers Vespasian to enlarge the Pomerium, a word familiar to every antiquary. It was not so to the tribune; he confounds it with pomerium, an orchard, translates to Jardins de Rome cicome Italia, and is copied by the less excusable ignorance of the Latin translator (p. 406) and the French historian (p. 33). Even the learning of Muratori has stumbled over the passage.

CHAP.
LXX.

rance of the nobles was incapable of discerning the serious tendency of such representations: they might sometimes chastise with words and blows the plebeian reformer; but he was often suffered in the Colonna palace to amuse the company with his threats and predictions; and the modern Brutus<sup>a</sup> was concealed under the mask of folly and the character of a buffoon. While they indulged their contempt, the restoration of the good estate, his favourite expression, was entertained among the people as a desirable, a possible, and at length as an approaching, event; and while all had the disposition to applaud, some had the courage to assist, their promised deliverer.

He assumes the government of Rome,
A. D. 1347,
May 29.

A prophecy, or rather a summons, affixed on the church-door of St. George, was the first public evidence of his designs; a nocturnal assembly of an hundred citizens on mount Aventine, the first step to their execution. After an oath of secrecy and aid, he represented to the conspirators the importance and facility of their enterprise; that the nobles, without union or resources, were strong only in the fear of their imaginary strength; that all power, as well as right, was in the hands of the people; that the revenues of the apostolical chamber might relieve the public distress; and that the pope himself would approve their victory over the common enemies of government and freedom. After securing a faithful band to protect his first declaration, he proclaimed through

<sup>a</sup> *Priori (Brutus) tamen similiter, juvenis interque, longe ingenuis
quon ejus simulationem induerat, ut sub hoc obtentu liberaret ille P. R. spectatur tempore suo. . . . Ille regibus, hic tyrannia con-scriptus* (Opp. p. 436).

the city, by sound of trumpet, that on the evening of the following day all persons should assemble without arms before the church of St. Angelo, to provide for the re-establishment of the good estate. The whole night was employed in the celebration of thirty masses of the Holy Ghost; and in the morning, Rienzi, bareheaded, but in complete armour, issued from the church, encompassed by the hundred conspirators. The pope's vicar, the simple bishop of Orvieto, who had been persuaded to sustain a part in this singular ceremony, marched on his right hand; and three great standards were borne aloft as the emblems of their design. In the first, the banner of liberty, Rome was seated on two lions, with a palm in one hand and a globe in the other; St. Paul, with a drawn sword, was delineated in the banner of justice; and in the third, St. Peter held the keys of concord and peace. Rienzi was encouraged by the presence and applause of an innumerable crowd, who understood little, and hoped much; and the procession slowly rolled forwards from the castle of St. Angelo to the capital. His triumph was disturbed by some secret emotion which he laboured to suppress: he ascended without opposition, and with seeming confidence, the citadel of the republic; harangued the people from the balcony; and received the most flattering confirmation of his acts and laws. The nobles, as if destitute of arms and counsels, beheld in silent consternation this strange revolution; and the moment had been prudently chosen, when the most formidable, Stephen Colonna, was absent from the city. On the first rumour, he returned to his palace, affected to despise this plebeian tumult, and declared to the messengers of Rienzi, that at his leisure he would cast the madman from the windows of the capitol. The great bell instantly rang an alarm, and so rapid was the tide, so urgent was the danger, that Colonna escaped with precipitation to the suburb of St. Laurence: from thence, after a moment's refreshment, he continued the same speedy career till he reached in safety his castle of Palestrina; lamenting his own imprudence, which had not trampled the spark of this mighty conflagration. A general and peremptory order was issued from the capitol to all the nobles, that they should peaceably retire to their estates: they obeyed; and their departure secured the tranquillity of the free and obedient citizens of Rome.

CHAP.
LXX.

with the title and office of tribune.

But such voluntary obedience evaporates with the first transports of zeal; and Rienzi felt the importance of justifying his usurpation by a regular form and a legal title. At his own choice, the Roman people would have displayed their attachment and authority, by lavishing on his head the names of senator or consul, of king or emperor: he preferred the ancient and modest appellation of tribune; the protection of the commons was the essence of that sacred office; and they were ignorant, that it had never been invested with any share in the legislative or executive powers of the republic. In this character, and with the consent of the Romans, the tribune enacted the most salutary laws for the restoration and maintenance

Laws of the constitution.

of the good estate. By the first he fulfils the wish of honesty and inexperience, that no civil suit should be protracted beyond the term of fifteen days. The danger of frequent perjury might justify the pronouncing against a false accuser the same penalty which his evidence would have inflicted; the disorders of the times might compel the legislator to punish every homicide with death, and every injury with equal retaliation; but the execution of justice was hopeless till he had previously abolished the tyranny of the nobles. It was formerly provided, that none, except the supreme magistrate, should possess or command the gates, bridges, or towers, of the state; that no private garrisons should be introduced into the towns or castles of the Roman territory; that none should bear arms, or presume to fortify their houses in the city or country; that the barons should be responsible for the safety of the highways and the free passage of provisions; and that the protection of malefactors and robbers should be expiated by a fine of a thousand marks of silver. But these regulations would have been impotent and nugatory, had not the licentious nobles been awed by the sword of the civil power. A sudden alarm from the bell of the capitol could still summon to the standard above twenty thousand volunteers: the support of the tribune and the laws required a more regular and permanent force. In each harbour of the coast, a vessel was stationed for the assurance of commerce; a standing militia of three hundred and

CHAP.
LXX.

sixty horse and thirteen hundred foot was levied, clothed, and paid, in the thirteen quarters of the city; and the spirit of a commonwealth may be traced in the grateful allowance of one hundred florins or pounds to the heirs of every soldier who lost his life in the service of his country. For the maintenance of the public defence, for the establishment of granaries, for the relief of widows, orphans, and indigent convents, Rienzi applied, without fear of sacrilege, the revenues of the apostolic chamber: the three branches of hearth-money, the salt-duty, and the customs, were each of the annual produce of one hundred thousand florins;* and scandalous were the abuses, if in four or five months the amount of the salt-duty could be trebled by his judicious economy. After thus restoring the forces and finances of the republic, the tribune recalled the nobles from their solitary independence; required their personal appearance in the capitol; and imposed an oath of allegiance to the new government, and of submission to the laws of the good estate. Apprehensive for their safety, but still more apprehensive of the danger of a refusal, the princes and barons returned to their houses at Rome in the garb of simple and peaceful citizens: the Colonna and Ursini, the Savelli and Frangipani, were con-

* In one ms. I read Q. li, c. 4, p. 409 perannuunt quatuor solidi, in another quattro scudi, an important variety, since the scudo was worth ten Roman solidi (Muratori, diisert. xxviii). The former reading would give us a population of 25,000, the latter of 250,000 families; and I much fear that the former is more consistent with the decey of Rome and her territory.

founded before the tribunal of a plebeian, of the vile buffoon whom they had so often derided; and their disgrace was aggravated by the indignation which they vainly struggled to disguise. The same oath was successively pronounced by the several orders of society, the clergy and gentlemen, the judges and notaries, the merchants and artisans; and the gradual descent was marked by the increase of sincerity and zeal. They swore to live and die with the republic and the church, whose interest was artfully united by the nominal association of the bishop of Orvieto, the pope's vicar, to the office of tribune. It was the boast of Rienzi, that he had delivered the throne and patrimony of St. Peter from a rebellious aristocracy; and Clement the sixth, who rejoiced in its fall, affected to believe the professions, to applaud the merits, and to confirm the title, of his trusty servant. The speech, perhaps the mind, of the tribune was inspired with a lively regard for the purity of the faith: he insinuated his claim to a supernatural mission from the Holy Ghost; enforced, by an heavy forfeiture, the annual duty of confession and communion; and strictly guarded the spiritual as well as temporal welfare of his faithful people.<sup>a</sup>

Never perhaps has the energy and effect of a single mind been more remarkably felt than in the sudden, though transient, reformation of Rome by the tribune Rienzi. A den of robbers was converted to the discipline of a camp <sup>a</sup> Hoesenianus, p. 368, apud du Cerceau, Hist. de Rienzi, p. 194. The fifteen tribunitian laws may be found in the Roman historian (whom for brevity I shall name) Fortiflorus, l. 9, c. 4.

CHAP.
LXX.

or convent: patient to hear, swift to redress, inexorable to punish, his tribunal was always accessible to the poor and stranger; nor could birth, or dignity, or the immunities of the church, protect the offender or his accomplices. The privileged houses, the private sanctuaries, in Rome, in which no officer of justice would presume to trespass, were abolished; and he applied the timber and iron of their barricades in the fortifications of the capitol. The venerable father of the Colonna was exposed in his own palace to the double shame of being desirous, and of being unable, to protect a criminal. A mule, with a jar of oil, had been stolen near Capranica; and the lord of the Ursini family was condemned to restore the damage, and to discharge a fine of four hundred florins for his negligence in guarding the highways. Nor were the persons of the barons more inviolate than their lands or houses; and, either from accident or design, the same impartial rigour was exercised against the heads of the adverse factions. Peter Agapet Colonna, who had himself been senator of Rome, was arrested in the street for injury or debt; and justice was appeased by the tardy execution of Martin Ursini, who, among his various acts of violence and rapine, had pillaged a shipwrecked vessel at the mouth of the Tyber.* His name, the purple of two * Portifonezza, l. ii. c. 11. From the account of this shipwreck we learn some circumstances of the trade and navigation of the age. 1. The ship was built and freighted at Naples for the ports of Marseilles and cardinals, his uncles, a recent marriage, and a mortal disease, were disregarded by the inflexible tribune, who had chosen his victim. The public officers dragged him from his palace and nuptial bed: his trial was short and satisfactory: the bell of the capital convened the people: stript of his mantle, on his knees, with his hands bound behind his back, he heard the sentence of death; and after a brief confession, Ursini was led away to the gallows. After such an example, none who were conscious of guilt could hope for impunity, and the flight of the wicked, the licentious, and the idle, soon purified the city and territory of Rome. In this time (says the historian) the woods began to rejoice that they were no longer infested with robbers; the oxen began to plough; the pilgrims visited the sanctuaries; the roads and inns were replenished with travellers; trade, plenty, and good faith, were restored in the markets; and a purse of gold might be exposed without danger in the midst of the highway. As soon as the life and property of the subject are secure, the labours and rewards of industry spontaneously revive: Rome was still the metropolis of the christian world; and the fame and fortunes of the tribune were diffused in and Avignon. 2. The sailors were of Naples and the Isle of Elbas, less skilful than those of Sicily and Genoa. 3. The navigation from Marseilles was a coasting voyage in the mouth of the Tyber, where they took shelter in a storm; but instead of finding the current, unfortunately run on a shoal: the vessel was stranded, the mariners escaped. 4. The cargo, which was pillaged, consisted of the revenue of Provence for the royal treasury, many bags of pepper and cinnamon, and bales of French cloth, to the value of 10,000 livres: a rich prize.

CHAP. every country by the strangers who had enjoyed LXX. the blessings of his government.

The tribune is respected in Italy, &c.

The deliverance of his country inspired Rienzei with a vast, and perhaps visionary, idea of uniting Italy in a great federative republic, of which Rome should be the ancient and lawful head, and the free cities and princes the members and associates. His pen was not less eloquent than his tongue; and his numerous epistles were delivered to swift and trusty messengers. On foot, with a white wand in their hand, they traversed the forests and mountains; enjoyed, in the most hostile states, the sacred security of ambassadors; and reported, in the style of flattery or truth, that the highways along their passage were lined with kneeling multitudes, who implored heaven for the success of their undertaking. Could passion have listened to reason; could private interest have yielded to the public welfare; the supreme tribunal and confederate union of the Italian republic might have healed their intestine discord, and closed the Alps against the barbarians of the North. But the propitious season had elapsed; and if Venice, Florence, Sienna, Perugia, and many inferior cities, offered their lives and fortunes to the good estate, the tyrants of Lombardy and Tuscany must despise, or hate, the plebeian author of a free constitution. From them, however, and from every part of Italy, the tribune received the most friendly and respectful answers: they were followed by the ambassadors of the princes and republics: and in this foreign conflux, on all the occasions of pleasure or business, the low-born notary could assume the familiar or majestic courtesy of a sovereign.<sup>f</sup> The most glorious circumstance of his reign was an appeal to his justice from Lewis king of Hungary, who complained, that his brother, and her husband, had been perfidiously strangled by Jane queen of Naples:<sup>g</sup> her guilt or innocence was pleaded in a solemn trial at Rome; but after hearing the advocates,<sup>h</sup> the tribune adjourned this weighty and invidious cause, which was soon determined by the sword of the Hungarian. Beyond the Alps, more especially at Avignon, the revolution was the theme of curiosity, wonder, and applause. Petrarch had been the private friend, perhaps the secret counsellor, of and celebrated by Petrarch.

<sup>f</sup> It was thus that Oliver Cromwell's old acquaintance, who remembered his vulgar and ungracious entrance into the house of commons, were astonished at the ease and majesty of the protector on his throne (see Harris's Life of Cromwell, p. 27-34, from Clarendon, Warwick, Whitlock, Wallis, &c.). The consciousness of merit and power will sometimes elevate the manners to the station.

<sup>g</sup> See the causes, circumstances, and effects, of the death of Andrew, in Giannone (tom. iii, l. xxiii, p. 220-229) and the Life of Petrarch (Memoires, tom. ii, p. 143-148, 245-250, 273-279, notes, p. 21-37). The abbé de Sade wishes to extenuate her guilt.

<sup>h</sup> The advocate who pleaded against Jane could add nothing to the logical force and fervor of his master's apostle, Johannes! inordinata vita praesentium, temeraria potentatus in regno, neglecta pietas, et alia suscepta, et exsecratio consequens, necis vii rei in publicum filium participem et consentem. Jane of Naples and Mary of Scotland have a singular conformity.

CHAP.
LXX.His vices
and follies.

act, applauds the hero, and mingles with some apprehension and advice the most lofty hopes of the permanent and rising greatness of the republic.<sup>1</sup>

While Petrarch indulged these prophetic visions, the Roman hero was fast declining from the meridian of fame and power; and the people, who had gazed with astonishment on the ascending meteor, began to mark the irregularity of its course, and the vicissitudes of light and obscurity. More eloquent than judicious, more enterprizing than resolute, the faculties of Rienzi were not balanced by cool and commanding reason: he magnified in a tenfold proportion the objects of hope and fear; and prudence, which could not have erected, did not presume to fortify, his throne. In the blaze of prosperity, his virtues were insensibly tinged with the adjacent vices; justice with cruelty, liberality with profusion, and the desire of fame with puerile and ostentatious vanity. He might have learned, that the ancient tribunes, so strong and sacred in the public opinion, were not distinguished in style, habit, or appearance, from an ordinary plebeian;<sup>2</sup> and that as often as they visited the city on foot, a single viator, or beadle, attended the exercise of their office. The Gracchi would have frowned or smiled, could they have read the sonorous titles and epithets of their successor, "Nicholas, severe and merciful; deliverer of Rome; defender of Italy; friend of mankind, and of liberty, peace, and justice; tribune august:" his theatrical pageants had prepared the revolution; but Rienzi abused, in luxury and pride, the political maxim of speaking to the eyes, as well as the understanding, of the multitude. From nature he had received the gift of an handsome person,<sup>m</sup> till it was swelled and disfigured by intemperance; and his propensity to laughter was corrected in the magistrate by the affectation of gravity and sternness. He was clothed, at least on public occasions, in a party-coloured robe of velvet or sattin, lined with fur, and embroidered with gold: the rod of justice, which he carried in his hand, was a sceptre of polished steel, crowned with a globe and cross of gold, and inclosing a small fragment of the true and holy wood. In his civil and reof . . . who is called inventor or discoverer, repper, solus auferre or transferre, &c. himself, and Petrusch himself, were incapable perhaps of reading a Greek philosopher; but they might have imbibed the same noxious doctrines from their favourite Latina, Lily and Valerius Maximus.

<sup>1</sup> See the Epistola Hortatoria de Capenda Republicæ, from Petrarch to Nicholas Biondi (Opp. p. 533-340), and the fifth eclogue, or pastoral, a perpetual and obscure allegory.

<sup>2</sup> In his Roman Questions, Petrarch (Opuscul. tom. i. p. 509, 500, edit. Græc. Henr. Steph.) states, on the most constitutional principles, the simple greatness of the tribunes, who were not properly magistrates, but a check on magistracy. It was their duty and interest ἀπαρτίζειν ἑκάστην, καὶ τοὺς καὶ ἡμετέρας ἀντιπαρατίθενται τοὺς πολίτας . . . παρακατατίθενται &c. in saying of C. Curio καὶ μὴ τιμῶν ἡμῶν τῇ δημοκρατίᾳ &c.

<sup>1</sup> I could not express in English the forcible, though barbarous, title of Zelator Italiae, which Riccioli assumed.

<sup>2</sup> "His bell' home (l. ii, c. i, p. 399). It is remarkable that the characteristic of the Boccaccio edition is wanting in the Roman ss. form which Murston has given the text. In his second reign, when he is painted almost as a monster, Boccaccio writes una ventrosa bocca trionfale, e modo de uno Abbate Asiatico, et Asiatico (l. iii, c. 18, p. 523).

CHAP.
LXX.

ligious processions through the city, he rode on a white steed, the symbol of royalty: the great banner of the republic, a sun with a circle of stars, a dove with an olive branch, was displayed over his head; a shower of gold and silver was scattered among the populace; fifty guards with halberds encompassed his person; a troop of horse preceded his march; and their tymbals and trumpets were of massy silver.

The pomp of his knighthood,
A. D. 1347,
August 13

The ambition of the honours of chivalry<sup>a</sup> betrayed the meanness of his birth, and degraded the importance of his office: and the equestrian tribune was not less odious to the nobles, whom he adopted, than to the plebeians, whom he deserted. All that yet remained of treasure, or luxury, or art, was exhausted on that solemn day. Rienzi led the procession from the capitol to the Lateran; the tediousness of the way was relieved with decorations and games: the ecclesiastical, civil, and military, orders marched under their various banners; the Roman ladies attended his wife; and the ambassadors of Italy might loudly applaud, or secretly deride, the novelty of the pomp. In the evening, when they had reached the church and palace of Constantine, he thanked and dismissed the numerous assembly, with an invitation to the festival of the ensuing day. From the hands of a venerable knight he received the order of the Holy Ghost; the purification of the bath was a previous ceremony; but in no step of his life did Rienzi excite such scandal and censure as by the profane use of the porphyry vase, in which Constantine (a foolish legend) had been healed of his leprosy by pope Sylvester.* With equal presumption the tribune watched or reposed within the consecrated precincts of the baptistery; and the failure of his state-bed was interpreted as an omen of his approaching downfall. At the hour of worship he shewed himself to the returning crowds in a majestic attitude, with a robe of purple, his sword, and gilt spurs; but the holy rites were soon interrupted by his levity and insolence. Rising from his throne, and advancing towards the congregation, he proclaimed in a loud voice: "We summon to our tribunal pope Clement; and command him to reside in his diocese of Rome: we also summon the sacred college of cardinals." We again summon the two pretenders, Charles of Bohemia and Lewis of Bavaria, who style themselves emperors: we likewise summon all the electors of Germany, to inform us on what pretence they have * All parties believed in the leprosy and bath of Constantine (Petrarch, Epist. Famil. vi, 2), and Rienzi justified his own conduct by observing to the court of Avignon, that a vase which had been used by a pagan, could not be profaned by a pious christian. Yet this crime is specified in the bull of excommunication (Hocceusius, apud de Cerreau, p. 189, 190).

<sup>a</sup> Strange as it may seem, this festival was not without a precedent. In the year 1321, two barons, a Column and an Ugent, the usual balance, were created knights by the Roman people: their bath was of rose water, their beds were decked with royal magnificence, and they were seated at St. Maria of Araceli, in the capitol, by the twenty-eight boni homines. They afterwards received from Robert King of Naples the sword of chivalry (Hist. Rom. l. 1, c. 2, p. 239).

* This verbal summons of pope Clement **, which rests on the authority of the Roman historian and a Yutham &c. is disputed by the biographer of Petrarch (Mon. ii, not. p. 10-16), with arguments rather of decency than of weight. The court of Avignon might not chuse to agitate this delicate question.

CHAP.
LXX.

"usurped the inalienable right of the Roman people, the ancient and lawful sovereigns of the empire."<sup>1</sup> Unsheathing his maiden sword, he thrice brandished it to the three parts of the world, and thrice repeated the extravagant declaration, "And this too is mine!" The pope's vicar, the bishop of Orvieto, attempted to check this career of folly; but his feeble protest was silenced by martial music; and instead of withdrawing from the assembly, he consented to dine with his brother tribune, at a table which had hitherto been reserved for the supreme pontiff. A banquet such as the Cæsars had given, was prepared for the Romans. The apartments, porticoes, and courts, of the Lateran were spread with innumerable tables for either sex, and every condition: a stream of wine flowed from the nostrils of Constantine's brazen horse; no complaint except of the scarcity of water, could be heard; and the licentiousness of the multitude was curbed by discipline and fear. A subsequent day was appointed for the coronation of Rienzi;<sup>2</sup> seven crowns of different leaves or metals were successively placed on his head by the most eminent of the Roman clergy; they represented the seven gifts of the Holy Ghost; and he still professed to imitate the example of the ancient tribunes. These extraordinary spectacles might deceive or flatter the people; and their own vanity was gratified in the vanity of their leader. But in his private life he soon deviated from the strict rule of frugality and abstinence; and the plebeians, who were awed by the splendour of the nobles, were provoked by the luxury of their equal. His wife, his son, his uncle (a barber in name and profession), exposed the contrast of vulgar manners and princely expence; and without acquiring the majesty, Rienzi degenerated into the vices, of a king.

see coronation.

<sup>1</sup> The summons of the two rival emperors, a monument of freedom and folly, is extant in Hocsemius (Coryn, p. 163-166).

<sup>2</sup> It is singular that the Roman historians should have overlooked this sevenfold coronation, which is sufficiently proved by internal evidence, and the testimony of Hocsemius, and even of Rienzi (Coryn, p. 167-170, 229).

A simple citizen describes with pity, or perhaps with pleasure, the humiliation of the barons of Rome. "Bareheaded, their hands crossed on their breast, they stood with downcast looks in the presence of the tribune; and they trembled; good God, how they trembled!" As long as the yoke of Rienzi was that of justice and their country, their conscience forced them to esteem the man, whom pride and interest provoked them to hate: his extravagant conduct soon fortified their hatred by contempt; and they conceived the hope of subverting a power which was no longer so deeply rooted in the public confidence. The old animosity of the Colonna and Ursini was suspended, for a moment, by their common disgrace: they associated their wishes, and perhaps their designs; an assassin was seized and tortured; he accused the nobles; and as soon as Rienzi deserved the fate, he adopted the suspicions and * Qual se facera stare denante a ea, mentre sedeva, li baroni tutti in piedi ritati co le vranche piegate, e co li capucci scattati. Deh come stavano paurati! (Hist. Rom. l. ii, c. 20, p. 439). He saw them, and we see them.

CHAP.

LXX.

*****

maxims, of a tyrant. On the same day, under various pretences, he invited to the capitol his principal enemies, among whom were five members of the Ursini and three of the Colonna name. But instead of a council or a banquet, they found themselves prisoners under the sword of despotism or justice; and the consciousness of innocence or guilt might inspire them with equal apprehensions of danger. At the sound of the great bell the people assembled; they were arraigned for a conspiracy against the tribune's life; and though some might sympathise in their distress, not a hand, nor a voice, was raised to rescue the first of the nobility from their impending doom. Their apparent boldness was prompted by despair; they passed in separate chambers a sleepless and painful night; and the venerable hero, Stephen Colonna, striking against the door of his prison, repeatedly urged his guards to deliver him, by a speedy death, from such ignominious servitude. In the morning they understood their sentence from the visit of a confessor and the tolling of the bell. The great hall of the capitol had been decorated for the bloody scene with red and white hangings; the countenance of the tribune was dark and severe; the swords of the executioners were unsheathed; and the barons were interrupted in their dying speeches by the sound of trumpets. But in this decisive moment, Rienzi was not less anxious or apprehensive than his captives; he dreaded the splendour of their names, their surviving kinsmen, the inconstancy of the people, the reproaches of the world; and, after rashly offering a mortal injury, he vainly presumed that, if he could forgive, he might himself be forgiven. His elaborate oration was that of a christian and a suppliant; and, as the humble minister of the commons, he entreated his masters to pardon these noble criminals, for whose repentance and future service he pledged his faith and authority. "If you are spared," said the tribune, "by the mercy of the Romans, will you not promise to support the good estate with your lives and fortunes?" Astonished by this marvellous clemency, the barons bowed their heads; and, while they devoutly repeated the oath of allegiance, might whisper a secret, and more sincere, assurance of revenge. A priest, in the name of the people, pronounced their absolution: they received the communion with the tribune, assisted at the banquet, followed the procession; and, after every spiritual and temporal sign of reconciliation, were dismissed in safety to their respective homes, with the new honours and titles of generals, consuls, and patricians.<sup>1</sup>

During some weeks they were checked by the memory of their danger, rather than of their deliverance, till the most powerful of the Ursini, escaping with the Colonna from the city, erected at Marino the standard of rebellion. The fortifications of the castle were instantly restored; the vassals attended their lord; the outlaws

They appeared Blond in arms.

<sup>1</sup> The original letter, in which Blond justifies his treatment of the Colonna (Hocmerius, apud Du Cerceau, p. 277-279) — plays, in genuine colours, the mixture of the knave and the madman.

CHAP.
LXX.

armed against the magistrate; the flocks and herds, the harvests and vineyards, from Marino to the gates of Rome, were swept away or destroyed; and the people arraigned Rienzi as the author of the calamities which his government had taught them to forget. In the camp, Rienzi appeared to less advantage than in the rostrum; and he neglected the progress of the rebel barons till their numbers were strong, and their castles impregnable. From the pages of Livy he had not imbibed the art, or even the courage, of a general; an army of twenty thousand Romans returned, without honour or effect, from the attack of Marino; and his vengeance was amused by painting his enemies, their heads downwards, and drowning two dogs (at least they should have been bears) as the representatives of the Ursini. The belief of his incapacity encouraged their operations: they were invited by their secret adherents; and the barons attempted, with four thousand foot and sixteen hundred horse, to enter Rome by force or surprise. The city was prepared for their reception: the alarm-bell rung all night; the gates were strictly guarded, or insolently open; and, after some hesitation, they sounded a retreat. The two first divisions had passed along the walls, but the prospect of a free entrance tempted the headstrong valour of the nobles in the rear; and, after a successful skirmish, they were overthrown and

Defeat and death of the Colonna,
Nov. 30.

massacred, without quarter, by the crowds of the Roman people. Stephen Colonna the younger, the noble spirit to whom Petrarch ascribed the restoration of Italy, was preceded or accompanied in death by his son John, a gallant youth, by his brother Peter, who might regret the ease and honours of the church, by a nephew of legitimate birth, and by two bastards of the Colonna race; and the number of seven, the seven crowns, as Rienzi styled them, of the Holy Ghost, was completed by the agony of the deplorable parent, and the veteran chief, who had survived the hope and fortune of his house. The vision and prophecies of St. Martin and pope Boniface had been used by the tribune to animate his troops: he displayed, at least in the pursuit, the spirit of an hero; but he forgot the maxims of the ancient Romans, who abhorred the triumphs of civil war. The conqueror ascended the capitol; deposited his crown and sceptre on the altar; and boasted with some truth, that he had cut off an ear which neither pope nor emperor had been able to amputate.<sup>2</sup> His base and implacable revenge denied the honours of burial; and the bodies of the Colonna, which he threatened to expose with those of the * Merat, in the above-mentioned letter, ascribes to St. Martin the tribune, Boniface VIII, the enemy of Colonna, himself, and the Roman people, the glory of the day, which Villani Decennio G. 12, c. 104 describes as a regular battle. The disorderly skirmish, the flight of the Romans, and the cowardice of Rienzi, are painted in the simple and minute narrative of Fortificora, or the anonymous citizen G. 2, c. 34-37.

* In describing the fall of the Colonna, I speak only of the family of Stephen the elder, who is often confounded by the P. de Capone with his son. That family was extinguished, but the house has been perpetuated in the collateral branches, of which I have not a very accurate knowledge. Circumspice says Petrarch familie tue statum Colonnae domus: colite praeiura habuit columnas. Quid aliud sem? modo fundamentum stabile, solidumque permanent.

CHAP.
LXX.

vildest malefactors, were secretly interred by the holy virgins of their name and family'. The people sympathised in their grief, repented of their own fury, and detested the indecent joy of Rienzi, who visited the spot where these illustrious victims had fallen. It was on that fatal spot that he conferred on his son the honour of knighthood; and the ceremony was accomplished by a slight blow from each of the horsemen of the guard, and by a ridiculous and inhuman ablution from a pool of water, which was yet polluted with patrician blood'.

Fall and Night of the terrible
Rienzi:
A. D. 1347,
Dec. 13.

A short delay would have saved the Colonna; the delay of a single month, which elapsed between the triumph and exile of Rienzi. In the pride of victory, he forfeited what yet remained of his civil virtues, without acquiring the fame of military prowess. A free and vigorous opposition was formed in the city; and when the tribune proposed in the public council* to impose a new tax, and to regulate the government of Perugia, thirty-nine members voted against his measures; repelled the injurious charge of treachery and corruption; and urged him to

* The convent of St. Sylvester was founded, endowed, and protected, by the Colonna cardinals, for the daughters of the family who embraced a monastic life, and who, in the year 1318, were twelve in number. The others were allowed to marry with their husbands in the fourth degree, and the dispensation was justified by the small number and close alliance of the noble families of Rome (Mannirey sur Petrarque, tom. 1, p. 110, tom. II, p. 401).

* Petrarque wrote a stiff and pedantic letter of consolation (Fam. l. vii, epist. 13, p. 682, 683). The rebuke was born in the poet's soul: Nulla tua velis principum familia curare; turris istam respulsi, curis Roma, curis Italia.

Je rends grâces aux Dieux de n'être pas Romain.

* This council and opposition is obscurely mentioned by Poggio, a contemporary writer, who has preserved some curious and original facts (Rer. Italianarum, tom. xiv, c. 31, p. 194-604).

prove, by their forcible exclusion, that, if the populace adhered to his cause, it was already disclaimed by the most respectable citizens. The pope and the sacred college had never been dazzled by his specious professions; they were justly offended by the insulence of his conduct; a cardinal legate was sent to Italy, and after some fruitless treaty, and two personal interviews, he fulminated a bull of excommunication, in which the tribune is degraded from his office, and branded with the guilt of rebellion, sacrilege, and heresy.<sup>b</sup> The surviving barons of Rome were now humbled to a sense of allegiance; their interest and revenge engaged them in the service of the church; but as the fate of the Colonna was before their eyes, they abandoned to a private adventurer the peril and glory of the revolution. John Pepin, count of Minorbino in the kingdom of Naples, had been condemned for his crimes, or his riches, to perpetual imprisonment; and Petrarch, by soliciting his release, indirectly contributed to the ruin of his friend. At the head of one hundred and fifty soldiers, the count of Minorbino introduced himself into Rome; harried the quarter of the Colonna; and found

<sup>b</sup> The bulls and bulls of Clement vi against Biondi are translated by the P. du Cerceau (p. 196, 232), from the Ecclesiastical Annals of Rodericus Bagnaldus (i. s. 1347, No. 15, 17, 21, &c.), who found them in the archives of the Vatican.

<sup>c</sup> Matteo Villani describes the origin, character, and death, of John count of Minorbino, a man de natura incostante e senza fede, whose grandfather, a crafty usurer, was enriched and ennobled by the spoils of the Saracens of Sicily (l. vii, c. 102, 103). See his imprisonment, and the efforts of Petrarch, tom. ii, p. 149-151.

CHAP.
LXX.

the enterprise as easy as it had seemed impossible. From the first alarm, the bell of the capitol incessantly tolled; but, instead of repairing to the well-known sound, the people was silent and inactive; and the pusillanimous Rienzi, deploring their ingratitude with sighs and tears, abdicated the government and palace of the republic.

Revolutions of Rome,
a. m. 1347-
1354.

Without drawing his sword, count Pepin restored the aristocracy and the church; three senators were chosen, and the legate assuming the first rank, accepted his two colleagues from the rival families of Colonna and Ursini. The acts of the tribune were abolished, his head was proscribed; yet such was the terror of his name, that the barons hesitated three days before they would trust themselves in the city; and Rienzi was left above a month in the castle of St. Angelo, from whence he peaceably withdrew, after labouring, without effect, to revive the affection and courage of the Romans. The vision of freedom and empire had vanished: their fallen spirit would have acquiesced in servitude, had it been smoothed by tranquillity and order; and it was scarcely observed, that the new senators derived their authority from the apostolic see; that four cardinals were appointed to reform, with dictatorial power, the state of the republic. Rome was again agitated by the bloody feuds of the barons, who detested each other, and despised the commons: their hostile fortresses, both in town and country, again rose, and were again demolished; and the peaceful citizens, a flock of sheep, were devoured, says the Florentine historian, by these rapacious wolves. But when their pride and avarice had exhausted the patience of the Romans, a confraternity of the virgin Mary protected or avenged the republic: the bell of the capitol was again tolled; the nobles in arms trembled in the presence of an unarmed multitude; and of the two senators, Colonna escaped from the window of the palace, and Ursini was stoned at the foot of the altar. The dangerous office of tribune was successively occupied by two plebeians, Cerroni and Baroncelli. The mildness of Cerroni was unequal to the times; and after a faint struggle, he retired with a fair reputation and a decent fortune to the comforts of rural life. Devoid of eloquence or genius, Baroncelli was distinguished by a resolute spirit: he spoke the language of a patriot, and trode in the footsteps of tyrants; his suspicion was a sentence of death, and his own death was the reward of his cruelties. Amidst the public misfortunes, the faults of Rienzi were forgotten; and the Romans sighed for the peace and prosperity of the good estate.<sup>a</sup>

After an exile of seven years, the first deliverer was again restored to his country. In the disguise of a monk or a pilgrim, he escaped from the castle of St. Angelo, implored the friendship of the kings of Hungary and Naples, tempted the ambition of every bold adventurer,

Adventures of Rienzi.

<sup>a</sup> The troubles of Rome, from the departure to the return of Rienzi, are related by Matteo Villani (l. ii. c. 47, l. vi. c. 33, 37, 78) and Thomas Fortescue (l. iii. c. 1-4). I have slightly passed over these secondary characters, who imitated the original tribune.

CHAP.
LXX.

mingled at Rome with the pilgrims of the jubilee, lay concealed among the hermits of the Appennine, and wandered through the cities of Italy, Germany, and Bohemia. His person was invisible, his name was yet formidable; and the anxiety of the court of Avignon supposes, and even magnifies, his personal merit. The emperor Charles the fourth gave audience to a stranger, who frankly revealed himself as the tribune of the republic; and astonished an assembly of ambassadors and princes, by the eloquence of a patriot, and the visions of a prophet, the downfall of tyranny, and the kingdom of the Holy Ghost.* Whatever had been his hopes, Rienzi found himself a captive; but he supported a character of independence and dignity, and obeyed, as his own choice, the irresistible summons of the supreme pontiff. The zeal of Petrarch, which had been cooled by the unworthy conduct, was rekindled by the sufferings and the presence, of his friend; and he boldly complains of the times, in which the saviour of Rome was delivered by her

A prisoner
at Avignon,
&c. 1351.

emperor into the hands of her bishop. Rienzi was transported slowly, but in safe custody, from Prague to Avignon; his entrance into the city was that of a malefactor; in his prison he was chained by the leg; and four cardinals were named to inquire into the crimes of heresy and rebellion.

* Those visions, of which the friends and the enemies of Rienzi seem alike ignorant, are surely magnified by the zeal of Poggio, a Dominican inquisitor (Rel. Ital. tom. xxx. c. 56. p. 819b). Had the tribune taught, that Christ was succeeded by the Holy Ghost, that the tyranny of the pope could be abolished, he might have been convicted of heresy and treason, without offending the Roman people.

But his trial and condemnation would have involved some questions, which it was more prudent to leave under the veil of mystery: the temporal supremacy of the popes; the duty of residence; the civil and ecclesiastical privileges of the clergy and people of Rome. The reigning pontiff well deserved the appellation of Clement: the strange vicissitudes and magnanimous spirit of the captive excited his pity and esteem; and Petrarch believes that he respected in the hero the name and sacred character of a poet.<sup>1</sup> Rienzi was indulged with an easy confinement and the use of books; and in the assiduous study of Livy, and the bible, he sought the cause and the consolation of his misfortunes.

The succeeding pontificate of Innocent the sixth opened a new prospect of his deliverance and restoration; and the court of Avignon was persuaded, that the successful rebel could alone appease and reform the anarchy of the metropolis. After a solemn profession of fidelity, the Roman tribune was sent into Italy, with the title of senator; but the death of Baroncelli appeared to supersede the use of his mission; and the legate, cardinal Albornoz,<sup>2</sup> a consummate statesman, allowed him with reluctance, and Rienzi, senator of Rome, A. D. 1354.

<sup>1</sup> The astonishment, the envy almost, of Petrarch is a proof, if not of the truth of this incredible fact, at least of his own veracity. The abbé de Sade (Mémoires, tom. III. p. 242) quotes the sixth episode of the thirteenth book of Petrarch, but it is of the aged man which he consulted, and not of the ordinary Hall edition (p. 937).

<sup>2</sup> Agadino, or Giles Albornoz, a noble Spaniard, archbishop of Toledo, and cardinal legate in Italy (A. D. 1353-1367), restored, by his arms and counsels, the temporal dominion of the popes. His life has been separately written by Segura; but Dryden could not reasonably suppose, that his name, or that of Wolsey, had reached the ears of the Multi in Don Scharidan.

CHAP.
LXX.
~~~~~

without aid, to undertake the perilous experiment. His first reception was equal to his wishes: the day of his entrance was a public festival; and his eloquence and authority revived the laws of the good estate. But this momentary sunshine was soon clouded by his own vices and those of the people: in the capitol, he might often regret the prison of Avignon; and after a second administration of four months, Rienzi was massacred in a tumult which had been fomented by the Roman barons. In the society of the Germans and Bohemians, he is said to have contracted the habits of intemperance and cruelty; adversity had chilled his enthusiasm, without fortifying his reason or virtue; and that youthful hope, that lively assurance, which is the pledge of success, was now succeeded by the cold impotence of distrust and despair. The tribune had reigned with absolute dominion, by the choice, and in the hearts, of the Romans: the senator was the servile minister of a foreign court; and while he was suspected by the people, he was abandoned by the prince. The legate Alborno, who seemed desirous of his ruin, inflexibly refused all supplies of men and money: a faithful subject could no longer presume to touch the revenues of the apostolical chamber; and the first idea of a tax was the signal of clamour and sedition. Even his justice was tainted with the guilt or reproach of selfish cruelty: the most virtuous citizen of Rome was sacrificed to his jealousy; and in the execution of a public robber, from whose purse he had been assisted, the magistrate too much forgot, or too much remembered, the obligations of the debtor.<sup>b</sup> A civil war exhausted his treasures and the patience of the city; the Colonna maintained their hostile station at Palestrina; and his mercenaries soon despised a leader whose ignorance and fear were envious of all subordinate merit. In the death as in the life of Rienzi, the hero and the coward were strangely mingled. When the capitol was invested by a furious multitude, when he was basely deserted by his civil and military servants, the intrepid senator, waving the banner of liberty, presented himself on the balcony, addressed his eloquence to the various passions of the Romans, and laboured to persuade them, that in the same cause himself and the republic must either stand or fall. His oration was interrupted by a volley of imprecations and stones; and after an arrow had transpierced his head, he sunk into abject despair, and fled weeping to the inner chambers, from whence he was let down by a sheet before the windows of the prison. Destitute of aid or hope, he was besieged till the evening; the doors of the capitol were destroyed with axes and fire; and while the senator attempted to escape in a plebeian habit, he was discovered and dragged to the platform of the palace, the fatal scene of his judgments and executions. A whole hour, without voice or motion, he stood amidst the multitude half naked and half dead; their rage was hushed into curiosity and wonder; the last <sup>b</sup> From Matteo Villani and Fortiflorca, the P. de Cerym (p. 244-294) has extracted the life and death of the chevalier Montrial, the life of a robber and the death of an hero. At the head of a free company, the best that dominated Italy, he became rich and formidable; he had money in all the banks, 40,000 ducats in Padua alone.

CHAP.
LXX.

His death,
A. D. 1354,
Sept. 8.

feelings of reverence and compassion yet struggled in his favour; and they might have prevailed, if a bold assassin had not plunged a dagger in his breast. He fell senseless with the first stroke; the impotent revenge of his enemies inflicted a thousand wounds; and the senator's body was abandoned to the dogs, to the Jews, and to the flames. Posterity will compare the virtues and failings of this extraordinary man; but in a long period of anarchy and servitude, the name of Rienzi has often been celebrated as the deliverer of his country, and the last of the Roman patriots.<sup>1</sup>

Petrarch invites and upbraid
the emperor
Charles IV.
A. D. 1355,
January—
May.

The first and most generous wish of Petrarch was the restoration of a free republic; but after the exile and death of his plebeian hero, he turned his eyes from the tribune, to the king, of the Romans. The capitol was yet stained with the blood of Rienzi, when Charles the fourth descended from the Alps to obtain the Italian and imperial crowns. In his passage through Milan he received the visit, and repaid the flattery, of the poet-laureat; accepted a medal of Augustus; and promised, without a smile, to imitate the founder of the Roman monarchy. A false application of the names and maxims of antiquity was the source of the hopes and disappointments of Petrarch: yet he could not overlook the difference of times and characters; the immeasurable distance between the first Cæsars and a Bohemian prince, who by the favour of the clergy had been elected the titular head of the German aristocracy. Instead of restoring to Rome her glory and her provinces,<sup>CHAP.

<sup>1</sup> The exile, second government, and death, of Rienzi, are minutely related by the anonymous Roman, who appears neither his friend nor his enemy (l. iii. c. 12-25). Petrarch, who loved the tribune, was indifferent to the fate of the senator.

LXX.</sup> he had bound himself, by a secret treaty with the pope, to evacuate the city on the day of his coronation; and his shameful retreat was pursued by the reproaches of the patriot bard.<sup>.....</sup>

After the loss of liberty and empire, his third <sup>His solicits</sup> and more humble wish was to reconcile the <sup>the pope of</sup> shepherd with his flock; to recall the Roman bishop <sup>Avignon to</sup> to his ancient and peculiar diocese. <sup>fix their re-</sup> In <sup>sidence at</sup> the fervour of youth, with the authority of age, Petrararch addressed his exhortations to five successive popes, and his eloquence was always inspired by the enthusiasm of sentiment and the freedom of language.<sup>1</sup> The son of a citizen of Florence invariably preferred the country of his birth to that of his education; and Italy, in his eyes, was the queen and garden of the world. Amidst her domestic factions, she was doubtless superior to France both in art and science, in wealth and politeness; but the difference could scarcely support the epithet of barbarous, which he promiscuously bestows on the countries beyond the Alps. Avignon, the myætic Babylon, the sink of vice and corruption, was the object of his hatred and contempt;

<sup>1</sup> The hopes and the disappointment of Petrararch are agreeably described in his own words by the French biographer (Mémoires, tom. iii, p. 373-417); but the deep, though secret, wound, was the nomination of Zanchi the post-laurent by Charles vi.

<sup>2</sup> See in his accurate and amusing biography, the application of Petrararch and Rome to Benedict xiv, in the year 1334 (Mémoires, tom. i, p. 261-266); to Clement vi, in 1342 (ibid. v, p. 42-47); and to Urban v, in 1360 (ibid. vi, p. 677-681); his praise (op. 711-716); and excess (op. 727), of the last of these pontiffs. His angry controversy on the respective merits of France and Italy may be found (Opp. p. 1068-1069).

CHAP.
LXX.

but he forgets that her scandalous vices were not the growth of the soil, and that in every residence they would adhere to the power and luxury of the papal court. He confesses, that the successor of St. Peter is the bishop of the universal church; yet it was not on the banks of the Rhone, but of the Tyber, that the apostle had fixed his everlasting throne: and while every city in the christian world was blessed with a bishop, the metropolis alone was desolate and forlorn. Since the removal of the holy see, the sacred buildings of the Lateran and the Vatican, their altars and their saints, were left in a state of poverty and decay; and Rome was often painted under the image of a disconsolate matron, as if the wandering husband could be reclaimed by the homely portrait of the age and infirmities of his weeping spouse.<sup>m</sup> But the cloud which hung over the seven hills would be dispelled by the presence of their lawful sovereign: eternal fame, the prosperity of Rome, and the peace of Italy, would be the recompence of the pope who should dare to embrace this generous resolution. Of the five whom Petrarch exhorted, the three first, John the twenty-second, Benedict the twelfth, and Clement the sixth, were importuned or amused by the boldness of the orator; but the memorable

<sup>m</sup> *Squalida sed quoniam facies, neglecta cultu
Canarivi: multiloque nullis jamis senectus
Eripuit solium solum: vestis occipit omnes;
Rome vacat.* (Cicero. l. 3, p. 77).

He spins this allegory beyond all measure of patience. The Epistles to Urban v. in prose, are more simple and persuasive (Sculliam, l. 911, p. 811-827, l. 14, epist. l. p. 844-856).

change which had been attempted by Urban the fifth, was finally accomplished by Gregory the eleventh. The execution of their design was opposed by weighty and almost insuperable obstacles. A king of France, who has deserved the epithet of wise, was unwilling to release them from a local dependence: the cardinals, for the most part his subjects, were attached to the language, manners, and climate, of Avignon; to their stately palaces; above all, to the wines of Burgundy. In their eyes, Italy was foreign or hostile; and they reluctantly embarked at Marseilles, as if they had been sold or banished into the land of the Saracens. Urban the fifth resided three years in the Vatican with safety and honour: his sanctity was protected by a guard of two thousand horse; and the king of Cyprus, the queen of Naples, and the emperors of the East and West, devoutly saluted their common father in the chair of St. Peter. But the joy of Petrarch and the Italians was soon turned into grief and indignation. Some reasons of public or private moment, his own impatience or the prayers of the cardinals, recalled Urban to France; and the approaching election was saved from the tyrannic patriotism of the Romans. The powers of heaven were interested in their cause: Bridget of Sweden, a saint and pilgrim, disapproved the return, and foretold the death, of Urban the fifth: the migration of Gregory the eleventh was encouraged by St. Catherine of Sienna, the spouse of Christ and ambassadress of the Florentines; and the popes themselves, the great masters of human credulity, appear to have listened to Return of Urban v.,

A. D. 1367,
October
19.
A. D. 1370,
April 17.

Final return of Gregory x.,
A. D. 1371,
Jan. 17.

CHAP.
LXX.

these visionary fumes.* Yet those celestial admonitions were supported by some arguments of temporal policy. The residence of Avignon had been invaded by hostile violence: at the head of thirty thousand robbers, an hero had extorted ransom and absolution from the vicar of Christ and the sacred college: and the maxim of the French warriors, to spare the people and plunder the church, was a new heresy of the most dangerous import.† While the pope was driven from Avignon, he was strenuously invited to Rome. The senate and people acknowledged him as their lawful sovereign, and laid at his feet the keys of the gates, the bridges, and the fortresses; of the quarter at least beyond the Tyber.‡ But this loyal offer was accompanied by a declaration, that they could no longer suffer the scandal and calamity of his absence; and that his obstinacy would finally provoke them to revive and assert the primitive right of election. The abbots of mount

* I have not leisure to expatiate on the legends of St. Bridget or St. Catherine, the last of which might furnish some amusing stories. Their effect on the mind of Gregory is attested by the last solemn words of the dying pope, who commended the assistants, in covertest abominations, utro viris, utro mulieribus, potestate religioſis, impotibus viduis et capitis, quibus per talia ipse cedebat. See (Belin. Not. ad Vie. Taps. Avenionensis, tom. i, p. 1113).

† This predatory expedition is related by Froissart (Chronique, tom. i, p. 230), and in the life of du Guesclin (Collection Générale des Mémoires Historiques, tom. ii, c. 16, p. 107-113). As early as the year 1391, the court of Avignon had been molested by similar freebooters, who afterwards passed the Alps (Mémoires sur Pétrarque, tom. iii, p. 363-369).

‡ Henry alleges, from the annals of Alexander Reynolds, the original treaty, which was signed the 31st of December 1376, between Gregory xi and the Romans (Hist. Eccles. tom. xi, p. 275).

Cassin had been consulted whether he would accept the triple crown<sup>a</sup> from the clergy and people; "I am a citizen of Rome," replied that venerable ecclesiastic, "and my first law is the voice of my country."

If superstition will interpret an untimely death,<sup>b</sup> if the merit of counsels be judged from the event; the heavens may seem to frown on a measure of such apparent reason and propriety. Gregory the eleventh did not survive above fourteen months his return to the Vatican; and his decease was followed by the great schism of the West, which distracted the Latin church above forty years. The sacred college was then composed of twenty-

<sup>a</sup> The first crown or regnum (Dionysius, Gloss. Latin. tom. 4, p. 703) as the episcopal mitre of the pope, is ascribed to the gift of Constantine, or Gelasius. The second was added by Simplicius, viz. as the emblem not only of a spiritual, but of a temporal, kingdom. The three states of the church are represented by the triple crown, which was introduced by John xxi or Benedict xii (Mansueti in Petrarque, tom. 1, p. 238, 239).

<sup>b</sup> Salutis (1664, ad Pap. Avinion. tom. 1, p. 1134, 1135) produces the original evidence which attests the threats of the Roman ambassadors, and the resignation of the abbot of mount Cassin, qui ultra secessum, respondit se cessum Romanorum non, et illud velle quod ipse vellet.

<sup>c</sup> The return of his paper from Avignon to Rome, and their reception by the people, are related in the original Lives of Urban 7, and Gregory xi, in Baron. (VII. Paparum Avinionensium, tom. 1, p. 363-456) and Muratori's scripta. Rec. Historiarum, tom. iii, p. 1, p. 610-712. In the dispute of the action, every circumstance was severely, though partially, examined: more especially in the great squabble, which decided the residence of Castrillo, and in which Baron, in his notes, so often and so largely appeals from a vast volume in the Harleian library (p. 1253, &c.).

<sup>d</sup> Can the state of a good man be extended a punishment by those who believe in the immortality of the soul? They betray the instability of their faith. Yet as a mere philosopher, I cannot agree with the Greeks, &c. as theophrastus avatocritus (Boswell, Portrait of Galiani, p. 251). See in Harleian li. 7, n. 51) the novel and pleasing tale of the Agave youths.

CHAP. two cardinals: six of these had remained at Avig-LXX. non; eleven Frenchmen, one Spaniard, and four Italians, entered the conclave in the usual form.

Electio of Urban vi. April 9. Their choice was not yet limited to the purple; and their unanimous votes acquiesced in the archbishop of Bari, a subject of Naples, conspicuous for his zeal and learning, who ascended the throne of St. Peter under the name of Urban the sixth.

 The epistle of the sacred college affirms his free and regular election; which had been inspired, as usual, by the Holy Ghost: he was adorned, invested, and crowned, with the customary rights; his temporal authority was obeyed at Rome and Avignon, and his ecclesiastical supremacy was acknowledged in the Latin world. During several weeks, the cardinals attended their new master with the fairest professions of attachment and loyalty; till the summer heats permitted a decent escape from the city. But as soon as they were united at Anagni and Fondi, in a place of security, they cast aside the mask, accused their own falsehood and hypocrisy, excommunicated the apostate and antichrist of Rome, and proceeded to a new election of Robert of Geneva, Clement the seventh, whom they announced to the nations as the true and rightful vicar of Christ. Their first choice, an involuntary and illegal act, was annulled by the fear of death and the menaces of the Romans; and their complaint is justified by the strong evidence of probability and fact. The twelve French cardinals, above two-thirds of the votes, were masters of the election; and whatever

Electio of Clement
 vii. Sept. 21.

might be their provincial jealousies, it cannot fairly be presumed that they would have sacrificed their right and interest to a foreign candidate, who would never restore them to their native country. In the various, and often inconsistent, narratives,* the shades of popular violence are more darkly or faintly coloured; but the licentiousness of the seditious Romans was inflamed by a sense of their privileges, and the danger of a second immigration. The conclave was intimidated by the shouts, and encompassed by the arms, of thirty thousand rebels: the bells of the capitol and St. Peter's rang an alarm; "Death, or an Italian pope!" was the universal cry; the same threat was repeated by the twelve bannerets, or chiefs of the quarters, in the form of charitable advice; some preparations were made for burning the obstinate cardinals; and had they chosen a Transalpine subject, it is probable that they would never have departed alive from the Vatican. The same constraint imposed the necessity of dissembling in the eyes of Rome and of the world: the pride and cruelty of Urban presented a more inevitable danger; and they soon discovered the features of the tyrant, who could walk in his garden and recite his breviary, while he heard, from an adjacent chamber, six cardinals groaning on the rack.

* In the first book of the Histoire du Concile de Pise, M. Lancelotti has abridged and compared the original narratives of the adherents of Urban and Clement, of the Italians and Germans, the French and Spaniards. The latter appear to be the most active and eloquent, and every fact and word in the original Letters of Gregory xi and Clement vii, are supposed to be the notes of their edacious Editors.

CHAP.
LXX.

His inflexible zeal, which loudly censured their luxury and vice, would have attached them to the stations and duties of their parishes at Rome; and had he not fatally delayed a new promotion, the French cardinals would have been reduced to an helpless minority in the sacred college. For these reasons, and in the hope of repassing the Alps, they rashly violated the peace and unity of the church; and the merits of their double choice are yet agitated in the catholic schools.* The vanity, rather than the interest, of the nation, determined the court and clergy of France.† The states of Savoy, Sicily, Cyprus, Arragon, Castile, Navarre, and Scotland, were inclined, by their example and authority, to the obedience of Clement the seventh, and, after his demise, of Benedict the thirteenth. Rome, and the principal states of Italy, Germany, Portugal, England,‡ the Low Countries, and the kingdoms of the north, adhered to the prior election of Urban the sixth, who was succeeded by Boniface the ninth, Innocent the tenth, and Gregory the twelfth.

* The ordinal numbers of the popes seem to decide the question against Clement vii and Benedict xiii, who are both designated as antipopes by the Italians, while the French are content with ascription and reasons to plead the cause of doubt and toleration (Histoire de France). It is singular, or rather it is not singular, that calows, vipers, and misdeeds, should be common to both parties.

† Recherches chronologiques (Paris, p. 1271-1280) to justify the force and good motives of Charles vi, king of France: he refused to bear the arguments of Urban; but were not the urbanists equally deaf to the reasons of Clement, &c.?

‡ An apostle, de declaratione, in the name of Edward iii (Halm. VII. Pap. Avenion. ann. 1) p. 113, displays the zeal of the English nation against the convention. Nor was their zeal confined to words: the bishop of Norwich led a crusade of 80,000 ligues beyond sea (House's History, vol. III, p. 57, 58).

CHAP.
LXX.

From the banks of the Tyber and the Rhône, the hostile pontiffs encountered each other with the pen and the sword; the civil and ecclesiastical order of society was disturbed; and the Romans had their full share of the mischiefs of which they may be arraigned as the primary authors.* They had vainly flattered themselves with the hope of restoring the seat of the ecclesiastical monarchy, and of relieving their poverty with the tributes and offerings of the nations; but the separation of France and Spain diverted the stream of lucrative devotion; nor could the loss be compensated by the two jubilees which were crowded into the space of ten years. By the avocations of the schism, by foreign arms and popular tumults, Urban the sixth, and his three successors, were often compelled to interrupt their residence in the Vatican. The Colonna and Orsini still exercised their deadly feuds: the bannerets of Rome asserted and abused the privileges of a republic; the vicars of Christ, who had levied a military force, chastised their rebellion with the gibbet, the sword, and the dagger; and in a friendly conference, eleven deputies of the people were perfidiously murdered and cast into the street. Since the invasion of Robert the Norman, the Romans had pursued their domestic quarrels

Great schism of the West,
p. 1372-
1415.

Calamities
of Rome.

* Besides the general histories, the Diaries of Desiderius Gemellus, Peter Antonius, and Stephen Infessura, in the great Collection of Muratori, represent the state and miseries of Rome.

CHAP.
LXX.

without the dangerous interposition of a stranger. But, in the disorders of the schism, an aspiring neighbour, Ladislaus, king of Naples, alternately supported and betrayed the pope and the people: by the former he was declared consulnier, or general, of the church, while the latter submitted to his choice the nomination of their magistrates. Besieging Rome by land and water, he thrice entered the gates as a barbarian conqueror; profaned the altars, violated the virgins, pillaged the merchants, performed his devotions at St. Peter's, and left a garrison in the castle of St. Angelo. His arms were sometimes unfortunate, and to a delay of three days he was indebted for his life and crown; but Ladislaus triumphed in his turn, and it was only his premature death that could save the metropolis and the ecclesiastical state from the ambitious conqueror, who had assumed the title, or at least the powers, of king of Rome.<sup>b</sup>

See also above the peace and union,
i. c. 1382.
1407.

I have not undertaken the ecclesiastical history of the schism; but Rome, the object of these last chapters, is deeply interested in the disputed succession of her sovereigns. The first counsels for the peace and union of Christendom arose from the university of Paris, from the faculty of the Sorbonne, whose doctors were esteemed, at least in the Gallican church, as the most consummate <sup>b</sup> It is supposed by Gieseler (Horn. 44, p. 237) that he styled himself Rex Romanus, a title unknown to the world since the expulsion of Tarquin. But a recent inspection has justified the reading of Rex Romanus, of Rome, an alternate kingdom annexed to the crown of Hungary.

masters of theological science.* Prudently waving all invidious inquiry into the origin and merits of the dispute, they proposed, as an healing measure, that the two pretenders of Rome and Avignon should abdicate at the same time, after qualifying the Cardinals of the adverse factions to join in a legitimate election; and that the nations should subtract their obedience, if either of the competitors preferred his own interest to that of the public. At each vacancy, these physicians of the church deprecated the mischiefs of an hasty choice: but the policy of the conclave and the amulation of its members were deaf to reason and entreaties; and whatsoever promises were made, the pope could never be bound by the oaths of the cardinal. During fifteen years, the pacific designs of the university were eluded by the arts of the rival pontiffs, the scruples or passions of their adherents, and the vicissitudes of French factions, that ruled the insanity of Charles the sixth. At length a vigorous resolution was embraced; and a solemn embassy, of the titular patriarch of Alexandria, two archbishops, five bishops, five abbots, three knights, and twenty doctors, was sent to the courts of * The leading and decisive part which France assumed in the schism, is stated by Peter de Pute in a separate History, extracted from authentic records, and inserted in the seventh volume of the last and best edition of his friend Thuanus (p. 21, p. 110-164).

* Of this measure, John Gerson, a stout doctor, was the sower at the champion. The proceedings of the university at Paris and the Gallien church were often prompted by his advice, and his popularity displayed in his theological writings, as opuscule de l'union des deux Eglises, tom. ii. p. 1-78; and gives a valuable account. John Gerson acted the important part in the councils of Vienne and Constance.

Avignon and Rome, to require, in the name of the church and king, the abdication of the two pretenders, of Peter de Luna, who styled himself Benedict the thirteenth, and of Angelo Corrario, who assumed the name of Gregory the twelfth. For the ancient honour of Rome, and the success of their commission, the ambassadors solicited a conference with the magistrates of the city, whom they gratified by a positive declaration, that the most christian king did not entertain a wish of transporting the holy see from the Vatican, which he considered as the genuine and proper seat of the successor of St. Peter. In the name of the senate and people, an eloquent Roman asserted their desire to co-operate in the union of the church, deplored the temporal and spiritual calamities of the long schism, and requested the protection of France against the arms of the king of Naples. The answers of Benedict and Gregory were alike edifying and alike deceitful; and, in evading the demand of their abdication, the two rivals were animated by a common spirit. They agreed on the necessity of a previous interview, but the time, the place, and the manner, could never be ascertained by mutual consent. "If the one advances," says a servant of Gregory, "the other retreats; the one appears an animal fearful of the land, the other a creature apprehensive of the water. And thus, for a short remnant of life and power, will these aged priests endanger the peace and salvation of the christian world."

* Leonardus Brunnus Arctinus, one of the revivers of classic learning

The christian world was at length provoked CHAP.
LXX.
by their obstinacy and fraud: they were deserted by their cardinals, who embraced each other Council of Pisa,
A. D. 1409.
as friends and colleagues; and their revolt was supported by a numerous assembly of prelates and ambassadors. With equal justice, the council of Pisa deposed the popes of Rome and Avignon; the conclave was unanimous in the choice of Alexander the fifth, and his variant ment was soon filled by a similar election of John the twenty-third, the most profligate of mankind. But instead of extinguishing the schism, the rashness of the French and Italians had given a third pretender to the chair of St. Peter.
Such new claims of the synod and conclave were disputed: three kings, of Germany, Hungary, and Naples, adhered to the cause of Gregory the twelfth; and Benedict the thirteenth, himself a Spaniard, was acknowledged by the devotion and patriotism of that powerful nation. The rash proceedings of Pisa were cur-rected by the council of Constance; the empertor Sigismund acted a conspicuous part as the advocate or protector of the catholic church; and the number and weight of civil and ecclesiastical members might seem to constitute the states-general of Europe. Of the three popes, John the twenty-third was the first victim; he fled, and was brought back a prisoner: the most

Council of Constance,
A. D. 1414-1418.

in Italy, who, after serving many years as secretary to the Roman court, retired to the humble office of chancellor of the republic of Florence (Pulver: History of the Art, tom. 3, p. 290). Leland has given the version of this curious episode (Councils of Pisa, tom. 3, p. 192-193).

CHAP.
LXX.

scandalous charges were suppressed, the vicar of Christ was only accused of piracy, murder, rape, sodomy, and incest; and after subscribing his own condemnation, he expiated in prison the imprudence of trusting his person to a free city beyond the Alps. Gregory the twelfth, whose obedience was reduced to the narrow precincts of Rimini, descended with more honour from the throne, and his ambassador convened the session, in which he renounced the title and authority of humble pope. To vanquish the obstinacy of Benedict the thirteenth, or his adherents, the emperor in person undertook a journey from Constance to Perpignan. The kings of Castille, Arragon, Navarre, and Scotland, obtained an equal and honourable treaty: with the concurrence of the Spaniards, Benedict was deposed by the council; but the harmless old man was left in a solitary castle to excommunicate twice each day the rebel kingdoms which had deserted his cause. After thus eradicating the remains of the schism, the synod of Constance proceeded, with slow and cautious steps, to elect the sovereign of Rome and the head of the church. On this momentous occasion, the college of twenty-three cardinals was fortified with thirty deputies: six of whom were chosen in each of the five great nations of Christendom, the Italian, the German, the French, the Spanish, and the English:<sup>a</sup> the in-

<sup>a</sup> I cannot overlook this great national cause, which was vigorously maintained by the English embassadors against those of France. The latter contended, that Christendom was essentially divided into ference of strangers was softened by their generous preference of an Italian and a Roman; and the hereditary, as well as personal, merit of Otho Colonna recommended him to the conclave. Rome accepted with joy and obedience the noblest of her sons, the ecclesiastical state was defended by his powerful family, and the elevation of Martin the fifth is the era of the restoration and establishment of the popes in the Vatican.*

CHAP.
LXX.

Election of Martin v.

into the four great nations, and each of Italy, Germany, France, and Spain; and that the four Kings, as Quakers in England, Denmark, Portugal, &c. were a perpetual source and cause of those great divisions. The English asserted, that the British islands, of which they were the head, should be considered as a fifth and essential nation, with an equal right and every argument of truth of which was introduced to exalt the dignity of their country. Forfeiting England, Scotland, Wales, the four Kingdoms of Ireland, and the Orkneys, the British islands are decorated with eight royal crowns, and discriminated by four or five languages, English, Welsh, Cornish, Scotch, Irish, &c. The greater island from north to south measures 300 miles, or 40 days journey; and England alone contains 15 counties, and 52,000 parish churches (a bold assertion), besides cathedrals, colleges, palaces, and hospitals. They celebrate the mission of St. Joseph of Arimathea, the birth of Constantine, and the legislative powers of the two palatines without forgetting the institution of Bartholomew de Glanville (i. e. 1349), who united only four of these Kingdoms, 1. of Rome, 2. of Constantinople, 3. of Ireland, which had been transferred to the English monarchs, and 4. of Spain. Our countrymen prevailed in the council, but the coronation of Henry v added much weight to these arguments. The address pleadings were drawn at Constant by Sir Robert Wingfield, ambassador from Henry v. to the emperor Maximilian v., and by him printed in 1512 at Leipzig. From a Leipzig ed. they are more correctly published in the collection of Van der Haert, tom. i. but I have only one Latin first's abstract of these acts (Comité de Louvain, tom. II, p. 447, 451. &c.)

* The histories of the three successive councils, Pisa, Constance, and Basle, have been written with a tolerable degree of candour, industry, and elegance, by a provincial minister, M. Lantini, who retired from France to Basle. They form six volumes in quarto; and as hard as the worst, so Constance is the best, part of the collection.

CHAP.
LXX.Martin v.
A. D. 1417.Eugenius
iv.
A. D. 1431.Nicholas v.
A. D. 1447.Last revolt
of Rome.
A. D. 1434.
May 29.
October 26.

The royal prerogative of coining money, which had been exercised near three hundred years by the senate, was first resumed by Martin the fifth,<sup>1</sup> and his image and superscription introduce the series of the papal medals. Of his two immediate successors, Eugenius the fourth was the last pope expelled by the tumults of the Roman people,<sup>2</sup> and Nicholas the fifth, the last who was importuned by the presence of a Roman emperor.<sup>3</sup> 1. The bratist of Eugenius with the fathers of Basel, and the weight or apprehension of a new excise, emboldened and provoked the Romans to usurp the temporal government of the city. They rose in arms, selected seven governors of the republic, and a constable of the capitol; imprisoned the pope's nephew; besieged his person in the palace; and shot volleys of arrows into his bark as he escaped down the Tyber in the habit of a monk. But he still possessed in the castle of St. Angelo a faithful garrison, and a train of artillery: their batteries incessantly thundered on the city, and a bullet more dextrously pointed broke down the barricade of the bridge, and scattered with a single shot the heroes of the republic. Their constancy was exhausted by a rebellion of six months. Under the tyranny of the Ghibeline nobles, the wisest patriots regretted the dominion of the church; and their repentance was unanimous and effectual. The troops of St. Peter again occupied the capitol; the magistrates departed to their homes; the most guilty were executed or exiled; and the legate, at the head of two thousand foot and four thousand horse, was saluted as the father of the city. The synods of Ferrara and Florence, the fear or resentment of Eugenius, prolonged his absence: he was received by a submissive people; but the pontiff understood from the acclamations of his triumphal entry, that to secure their loyalty and his own repose, he must grant without delay the abolition of the odious excise. II. Rome was restored, adorned, and enlightened, by the peaceful reign of Nicholas the fifth. In the midst of these laudable occupations, the pope was alarmed by the approach of Frederic the third of Austria: though his fears could not be justified by the character or the power of the imperial candidate. After drawing his military force to the metropolis, and imposing the best security of oaths<sup>1</sup> and

<sup>1</sup> See the twenty-seventh dissertation of the Antiquities of Muratori, and the first instruction of the Science des Medailles of the Paris Academy and the Baron de la Baille. The Metallic history of Martin v. and his successors, has been composed by two monks, Maslinet a Frenchman, and Bonanni an Italian: but I understand, that the best part of the notes is extracted from more recent coins.

<sup>2</sup> Besides the lives of Eugenius iv. (Beruzi, Italic. quart. 36, p. 1, p. 448, and idem, xiv, p. 245), the Diaries of Paul Petrucci and Sigismondo Infessura are the best original evidence for the revolt of the Romans against Eugenius iv. The former, who lived at the time, and on the spot, speaks the language of a citizen, equally afraid of priest, ty and popular tyranny.

<sup>3</sup> The coronation of Frederic iii. is described by Leubart (Comité de Balle, tom. II, p. 276-282), from Anna Sylviæ, a spectator and actor in that splendid scene.

Last coronation of a German emperor, Frederic III.
1452
March 12.

<sup>1</sup> The oath of fidelity imposed on the emperor by the pope, is recorded and subscribed in the Clementine, c. li, lii, liii, and Ecce Sylvestri, who objects to this new demand, could not foresee, that in a few years he should ascend the throne, and invade the maxims, of Boniface xiv.

CHAP.
LXX.

treaties, Nicholas received with a smiling countenance the faithful advocate and assual of the church. So tame were the times, so feeble was the Austrian, that the pomp of his coronation was accomplished with order and harmony: but the superfluous honour was so disgraceful to an independent nation, that his successors have excused themselves from the toil-some pilgrimage to the Vatican, and rest their imperial title on the choice of the electors of Germany.

The ustices and government of Rome.

A citizen has remarked, with pride and pleasure, that the king of the Romans, after passing with a slight salute the cardinals and prelates who met him at the gate, distinguished the dress and person of the senator of Rome; and in this last farewell, the pageants of the empire and the republic were clasped in a friendly embrace.* According to the laws of Rome,† her first magistrate was required to be a doctor of laws, an alien, of a place at least forty miles from the city; with whose inhabitants he must not be connected in the third canonical degree of blood or alliance. The election was annual: a severe scrutiny was instituted into the conduct of the departing senator; nor could he be recalled to the same office till after the expiration of two years. A liberal salary of three thousand florins was assigned for his expence and reward; and his public appearance represented the majesty of the republic. His robes were of gold brocade or crimson velvet, or in the summer season of a lighter silk; he bore in his hand an ivory sceptre; the sound of trumpets announced his approach; and his solemn steps were preceded at least by four lictors or attendants, whose red wands were enveloped with bands or streamers of the golden colour or livery of the city. His oath in the capitol proclaims his right and duty, to observe and assert the laws, to controul the proud, to protect the poor, and to exercise justice and mercy within the extent of his jurisdiction. In these useful functions he was assisted by three learned strangers, the two consulares, and the judge of criminal appeals; their frequent trials of robberies, rapes, and murders, are attested by the laws; and the weakness of these laws connives at the licentiousness of private bands and armed associations for mutual defence. But the senator was confined to the administration of justice: the capitol, the treasury, and the government of the city and its territory was entrusted to the three conservators, who were changed four times in each year: the militia of the thirteen regions assembled under the banners of their respective chiefs or capitani; and the first of these was distinguished by the name and dignity of the prætor. The popular legislature consisted of the ædiles and the common councils of the Romans. The former was composed of the magistrates and their immediate predecessors, with so many fiscal and legal officers, and three classes of thirteen, twenty-six, and forty counsellors, amounting in the whole to about one hundred and twenty persons. In the common council all male citizens had a right to vote; and the value of their privilege was enhanced by the care with which any foreigners were prevented from usurping the title and character of Romans. The tumult of a democracy was checked by wise and jealous precautions: except the magistrates, none could propose a question; none were permitted to speak, except from an open pulpit or tribunal; all disorderly acclamations were suppressed; the sense of the majority was decided by a secret ballot; and their decrees were promulgated in the venerable name of the Roman senate and people. It would not be easy to assign a period in which this theory of government has been reduced to accurate and constant practice, since the establishment of order has been gradually connected with the decay of liberty. But in the year one thousand five hundred and eighty, the ancient statutes were collected, methodized in three books, and adapted to present use, under the pontificate, and with the approbation, of Gregory the thirteenth: this civil and criminal code is the modern law of the city; and if the popular assemblies have been abolished, a foreign senator, with the three conservators, still resides in the palace of the capitol.<sup>2</sup> The policy of the Cæsars has been repeated by the popes; and the bishop of Rome asserted to maintain the form of a republic, while he reigned with the absolute powers of a temporal, as well as spiritual, monarch.

* Le senatore di Roma, vestito di porpora con quella berretta, e con quella crociata, ed ornamenti di poi, m'ebbe un'alta toca di Turchia e Nagone, tolta esser la croce di d'oro d'argento, ma he li steset with admiration and complacency, by the Roman citizens (Glossa di Stefano Infessura, p. 1123).

† See in the statutes of Rome, the statute and three following (l. 1. c. 34), the consensuaries (l. 1. c. 13, l. 15, l. 16, l. 17, l. 18, l. 19, l. 20, l. 21, l. 22, l. 23, l. 24, l. 25, l. 26, l. 27, l. 28, l. 29, l. 30, l. 31, l. 32, l. 33, l. 34, l. 35, l. 36, l. 37, l. 38, l. 39, l. 40, l. 41, l. 42, l. 43, l. 44, l. 45, l. 46, l. 47, l. 48, l. 49, l. 50, l. 51, l. 52, l. 53, l. 54, l. 55, l. 56, l. 57, l. 58, l. 59, l. 60, l. 61, l. 62, l. 63, l. 64, l. 65, l. 66, l. 67, l. 68, l. 69, l. 70, l. 71, l. 72, l. 73, l. 74, l. 75, l. 76, l. 77, l. 78, l. 79, l. 80, l. 81, l. 82, l. 83, l. 84, l. 85, l. 86, l. 87, l. 88, l. 89, l. 90, l. 91, l. 92, l. 93, l. 94, l. 95, l. 96, l. 97, l. 98, l. 99, l. 100). The title of first magistrate, with of consensuaries, &c. is spread through many a chapter (e. 14-40) of the second book.

CHAP.
LXX.

* Statuta alius Ceteris Romæ Antiquiora, A. D. M. Gregori XIII, Pont. Max, a Senatu Populoque Rom. reformati et edita. Romæ, 1580, in folio. The obsolete, repugnant statutes of antiquity were confound-

CHAP.
LXX.

Conspiracy
of Porcary,
in 1453,
January 9.

It is an obvious truth, that the times must be suited to extraordinary characters, and that the genius of Cromwell or Retz might now expire in obscurity. The political enthusiasm of Rienzi had exalted him to a throne; the same enthusiasm, in the next century, conducted his imitator to the gallows. The birth of Stephen Porcary was noble, his reputation spotless; his tongue was armed with eloquence, his mind was enlightened with learning; and he aspired, beyond the aim of vulgar ambition, to free his country, and immortalize his name. The dominion of priests is most odious to a liberal spirit: every scruple was removed by the recent knowledge of the fable and forgery of Constantine's donation; Petrarch was now the oracle of the Italians; and as often as Porcary revolved the ode which describes the ed in five books, and Lazzar Pansa, a Jewyer and antiquarian, was appointed to act as the modern Trillemian. Yet I regret the old code, with the rugged restraint of freedom and inclination.

<sup>2</sup> In my time (1755), and in M. Girardey's Observations sur l'Italie, tom. II. p. 381, the senator of Rome was M. Beldin, a noble Swede, and a proselyte to the catholic faith. The pope's right to appoint the senator and the conservators is implied, rather than affirmed, in the statutes.

CHAP.
LXX.

patriot and hero of Rome; he applied to himself the visions of the prophetic bard. His first trial of the popular feelings was at the funeral of Eugenius the fourth: in an elaborate speech he called the Romans to liberty and arms; and they listened with apparent pleasure, till Porcario was interrupted and answered by a grave advocate, who pleaded for the church and state. By every law the seditious orator was guilty of treason; but the benevolence of the ~~pope~~ pontiff, who viewed his character with pity and esteem, attempted by an honourable office to convert the patriot into a friend. The inflexible Roman returned from Anagni with an increase of reputation and zeal; and, on the first opportunity, the games of the place Navona, he tried to inflame the casual dispute of some boys and mechanics into a general rising of the people. Yet the humane Nicholas was still averse to accept the forfeit of his life; and the traitor was removed from the scene of temptation to Bologna, with a liberal allowance for his support, and the easy obligation of presenting himself each day before the governor of the city. But Porcario had learned from the younger Brutus, that with tyrants no faith or gratitude should be observed; the exile declaimed against the arbitrary sentence; a party and a conspiracy were gradually formed; his nephew, a daring youth, assembled a band of volunteers; and on the appointed evening a feast was prepared at his house for the friends of the republic. Their leader, who had escaped from Bologna, appeared among them in a robe of purple and gold: his voice, his countenance, his gestures, bespoke the man who had devoted his life or death to the glorious cause. In a studied oration, he expatiated on the motives and the means of their enterprise: the name and liberties of Rome; the sloth and pride of their ecclesiastical tyrants; the active or passive consent of their fellow-citizens; three hundred soldiers and four hundred exiles, long exercised in arms or in wrongs; the licence of revenge to edge their swords, and a million of denars to reward their victory. It would be easy (he said), on the next day, the festival of the Epiphany, to seize the pope and his cardinals, before the doors, or at the altar, of St. Peter's; to lead them in chains under the walls of St. Angelo; to extort by the threat of their instant death a surrender of the castle; to ascend the vacant capitol; to ring the alarm-bell; and to restore in a popular assembly the ancient republic of Rome. While he triumphed, he was already betrayed. The senator, with a strong guard, invested the house: the nephew of Porcario cut his way through the crowd; but the unfortunate Stephen was drawn from a chest, lamenting that his enemies had anticipated by three hours the execution of his design. After such manifest and repeated guilt, even the mercy of Nicholas was silent. Porcario, and nine of his accomplices, were hanged, without the benefit of the sacraments; and amidst the fears and invectives of the papal court, the Romans pitied,

CHAP. and almost applauded, these martyrs of their LXX country.* But their applause was mute, their pity ineffectual, their liberty for ever extinct; and, if they have since risen in a vacancy of the throne or a scarcity of bread, such accidental tumults may be found in the bosom of the most abject servitude.

Last disorders of the nobles of Rome.

But the independence of the nobles, which was fomented by discord, survived the freedom of the commons, which must be founded in union. A privilege of rapine and oppression was long maintained by the barons of Rome; their houses were a fortress and a sanctuary; and the ferocious train of banditti and criminals whom they protected from the law, repaid the hospitality with the service of their swords and daggers. The private interest of the pontiffs, or their nephews, sometimes involved them in these domestic feuds. Under the reign of Sixtus the fourth, Rome was distracted by the battles and sieges of the rival houses; after the conflagration of his palace, the protonotary Calonna was tortured and beheaded, and Savelli, his captive friend, was murdered on the spot, for refusing to join in the acclamations of the victorious Ursini.* But the popes no longer trembled in the Vatican: they had strength to command; if they had resolution to claim, the obedience of their subjects; and the strangers, who observed these partial disorders, admired the easy taxes and wise administration of the ecclesiastical state.

* Besides the various though common caricatures of Machiavel (Storia Fiorentina, l. vi. Opere, tom. i. p. 210, 211, edit. Londra, 1747. In this, the Florentine conspiracy is related in the Diary of Stephen Infessura (Stor. Ital. tom. ii. p. 3. p. 1134, 1135, and in a separate tract by Lion Battista Alberti (Stor. Ital. tom. xiv. p. 809-814). It is surprising to compare the style and sentiments of the courtes and citizens. Faciunt profusum quæ . . . inque pericula horribilia, neque misericordiam sperantibus, ungue proditorum tactis, a compari perditione quam optant et cupiunt ut . . . Perdatis in vita quasi in omni de loco, a salute della bene et libere di Roma.

CHAP.
LXX.

The spiritual thunders of the Vatican depend on the force of opinion; and if that opinion be supplanted by reason or passion, the sound may idly waste itself in the air; and the helpless priest is exposed to the brutal violence of a noble or a plebeian adversary. But after their return from Avignon, the keys of St. Peter were guarded by the sword of St. Paul. Rome was commanded by an impregnable citadel: the use of cannon is a powerful engine against popular seditions; a regular force of cavalry and infantry was enlisted under the banners of the pope: his ample revenues supplied the resources of war; and, from the extent of his domain, he could bring down on a rebellious city an army of hostile neighbours.

The popes acquire the absolute dominion of Rome, a. d. 1400, &c.

* The disorders of Rome, which were much inflamed by the party of the Ursini, are exposed in the Diades of two speculators, Josephus Infessura, and an anonymous citizen. See the troubles of the year 1484, and the death of the protopope Colonna, in tom. II. p. li. p. 1083, 1104.

* Est toute la terre de l'église troublée pour cette particulière des Colonnes et des Ursini, comme nous diront Luce et Grammont, ou en Hollande Hume et Cabillon; et quand ce ne seroit ce différend la terre de l'église seroit la plus heureuse habitation pour les sujets, qui n'ont plus tout le monde (car ils ne payent ni tailles ni guerres autres choses), et seraient toujours bien conditionnés (car toujours les papes sont sages et bien conditionnés); mais leur avarice en a fait de grands et cruels ennemis et pilliers.

CHAP.
LXX.

and loyal subjects.* Since the union of the duchies of Ferrara and Urbino, the ecclesiastical state extends from the Mediterranean to the Adriatic, and from the confines of Naples to the banks of the Po; and as early as the sixteenth century, the greater part of that spacious and fruitful country acknowledged the lawful claims and temporal sovereignty of the Roman pontiffs. Their claims were readily deduced from the genuine, or fabulous, donations of the darker ages: the successive steps of their final settlement would engage us too far in the transactions of Italy, and even of Europe; the crimes of Alexander the sixth, the martial operations of Julius the second, and the liberal policy of Leo the tenth, a theme which has been adorned by the pens of the noblest historians of the times.† In the first period of their conquests, till the expedition of Charles the eighth, the popes might successfully wrestle with the adjacent princes and states, whose military force was equal, or inferior, to their own: but as soon as the monarchs of France, Germany, and Spain,

* By the economy of Sixtus v the revenue of the ecclesiastical state was raised to two millions and a half of Roman crowns (Vitt. torn. ii. p. 221. 226); and so regular was the military establishment, that in one month Clement xiii could invade the duchy of Ferrara with three thousand horse and twenty thousand foot men. iii. p. 64. Since that time (i. e. 1595) the papal arms are happily quiescent; but the revenues must have gained some minimal increase.

† More especially by Guicciardini and Machiavel; in the general history of the century, in the Florentine history, the Prince, and the political discourses of the latest. These, with their worthy successors, Fra-Paolo and Davila, were justly esteemed the first historians of modern languages, iii. In the present age, Scotland crosses, to dispute the prize with Italy herself.

contended with gigantic arms for the dominion of Italy, they supplied with art the deficiency of strength; and concealed, in a labyrinth of wars and treaties, their aspiring views, and the immortal hope of chasing the barbarians beyond the Alps. The nice balance of the Vatican was often subverted by the soldiers of the North and West, who were united under the standard of Charles the fifth: the feeble and fluctuating policy of Clement the seventh exposed his person and dominions to the conqueror; and Rome was abandoned seven months to a lawless army, more cruel and rapacious than the Goths and Vandals.<sup>1</sup> After this severe lesson, the popes contracted their ambition, which was almost satisfied, resumed the character of a common parent, and abstained from all offensive hostilities, except in an hasty quarrel, when the vicar of Christ and the Turkish sultan were armed at the same time against the kingdom of Naples.<sup>2</sup> The French and Germans at length withdrew from the field of battle: Milan, Naples, Sicily, Sardinia, and the sea-coast of Tuscany, were firmly possessed by the Spaniards; and it became their interest to maintain the peace and

<sup>1</sup> In the history of the Gothic siege, I have compared the tortures with the subjects of Charles the 5th (vol. i, p. 319-322); no participation, which, like that of the Tartar conquests, I indulged with the historians, as I could scarcely hope to reach the conclusion of my work.

<sup>2</sup> The ambitious and feeble hostilities of the Caraffa pope, Paul IV. may be seen in Thuanus (l. xvi-xxv) and Gentilius (num. ix, p. 149-163). These papal legats, Philip II. and the duke of Alva, proposed to separate the Roman prince from the stem of Christ; yet the holy character, which would have sanctified his enemy, was successfully applied to protect his defeat.

CHAP.
LXX.

dependence of Italy, which continued almost without disturbance from the middle of the sixteenth to the opening of the eighteenth century. The Vatican was swayed and protected by the religious policy of the catholic king: his prejudice and interest disposed him in every dispute to support the prince against the people; and instead of the encouragement, the aid; and the asylum, which they obtained from the adjacent states, the friends of liberty, or the enemies of law, were inclosed on all sides within the iron circle of despotism. The long habits of obedience and education subdued the turbulent spirit of the nobles and commons of Rome. The barons forgot the arms and factions of their ancestors, and insensibly became the servants of luxury and government. Instead of maintaining a crowd of tenants and followers, the produce of their estates was consumed in the private expences, which multiply the pleasures, and diminish the power, of the lord.* The Colonna and Ursini vied with each other in the decoration of their palaces and chapels; and their antique splendour was rivalled or surpassed by the sudden opulence of the papal families. In Rome the voice of freedom and discord is no longer heard; and instead of the foaming torrent, a smooth and stagnant lake reflects the image of idleness and servitude.

* This gradual change of manners and expence is admirably explained by Dr. Adam Smith. Wealth of Nations, vol. 1, p. 493-505. He was generous, perhaps too severely, that the most salutary effects have flowed from the meanest and most selfish causes.

A christian, a philosopher,* and a patriot, will be equally scandalized by the temporal kingdom of the clergy; and the local majesty of Rome, the remembrance of her consuls and triumphs, may seem to embitter the sense, and aggravate the shame, of her slavery. If we calmly weigh the merits and defects of the ecclesiastical government, it may be praised in its present state, as a mild, decent, and tranquil system, exempt from the dangers of a minority, the sallies of youth, the expences of luxury, and the calamities of war. But these advantages are overbalanced by a frequent, perhaps a septennial election of a sovereign, who is seldom a native of the country: the reign of a young statesman of threescore, in the decline of his life and abilities, without hope to accomplish, and without children to inherit, the labours of his transitory reign. The successful candidate is drawn from the church, and even the convent; from the mode of education and life the most adverse to reason, humanity, and freedom. In the trammels of servile faith, he has learned to believe because it is absurd, to revere all that is contemptible, and to despise whatever might deserve the esteem of a rational being: to punish error as a crime, to reward mortification and celibacy as the first of virtues; to place the saints of the calendar<sup>b</sup> above

CHAP.
LXX.

The ecclesiastical government.

* Mr. Hume (Hist. of England, vol. i, p. 589) has lately concluded, that if the civil and ecclesiastical powers be united in the same person, it is of little moment whether he be a good prince or profligate, since the temporal violence will always predominate.

<sup>b</sup> A protestant may dispute the unworthy preference of St. Francis

CHAP.
LXX.

the heroes of Rome and the sages of Athens; and to consider the missal, or the crucifix, as more useful instruments than the plough or the loom. In the office of nuncio, or the rank of cardinal, he may acquire some knowledge of the world; but the primitive staid will adhere to his mind and manners: [from study and experience he may suspect the mystery of his profession; but the sacerdotal artist will imbibe some portion of the bigotry which he inculcates. The genius of Sixtus the fifth<sup>1</sup> burst from the gloom of a Franciscan cloister. In a reign of five years, he exterminated the outlaws and banditti, abolished the profane sanctuaries of Rome<sup>2</sup>, formed a naval and military force, restored and emulated the monuments of antiquity, and after a liberal use and large increase of the revenue, left five millions of crowns

SIXTUS V.
A. D. 1585-
1590

or St. Dominic, but he will not rashly condemn the zeal or judgment of Sixtus V., who placed the statue of the apostles, St. Peter and St. Paul, on the vacant columns of Trajan and Antonine.

<sup>1</sup> A wandering Italian, Gregorio Leti, has given the Vita di Sisto Quinto (Amstel. 1721, 3 vols. in 12mo), a copious and amusing work, but which does not command our absolute confidence. Yet the character of the man, and the principal facts, are supported by the annals of Spelman and Muratori (s. v. 1585-1590), and the contemporary history of the great Tassinus (l. lxxii, c. 1, 2, 3, lxxiv, c. 10, l. c. c. 8).

<sup>2</sup> These privileged places, the quartieri di franchigia, were adopted from the Roman soldiers by the foreign ministers. Julius II had once abolished the absolutum et detectum franchitarum impediendi nomen; and after Sixtus V. they again revived. I cannot discern either the justice or expediency of Louis XIV., who, in 1697, sent his ambassador, the marquis de Lamoignon, to Rome, with an armed force of a thousand officers, guards, and domestics, to suppress the jurisdiction claim, and banish pope Innocent XI to the heart of his capital (Vita di Sisto V., tom. iii, p. 262-272. Muratori). Annali d'Italia, tom. xv, p. 424-496, and Voltaire, Siècle de Louis XIV., tom. iv, p. 14, p. 28, 29.

in the castle of St. Angelo. But his justice was sullied with cruelty, his activity was prompted by the ambition of conquest; after his decease, the abuses revived; the treasure was dissipated; he entailed on posterity thirty-five new taxes and the venality of offices; and, after his death, his statue was demolished by an ungrateful, or an injured, people.* The wild and original character of Sixtus the fifth stands alone in the series of the pontiffs: the maxims and effects of their temporal government may be collected from the positive and comparative view of the arts and philosophy, the agriculture and trade, the wealth and population, of the ecclesiastical state. For myself, it is my wish to depart in charity with all mankind, nor am I willing, in these last moments, to offend even the pope and clergy of Rome.†

* This outrage produced a decree, which was inscribed on marble, and placed in the capital. It is expressed in a style of nearly simplicity and freedom: Si quis, sine potestate, sine magistratum potestate collectandis sine pontificis stantis mentionem facere audeat, legitime n. v. s. s. decreto in perpetuum infamis et posthumum in numerum expers esse solet. Helius Augustus (Vita di Sixto v., tom. iii. p. 402), I believe that this decree is still preserved, and I know that every monarch who dares to decree a statue, should himself require the prohibition.

† The libraries of the church, Italy, and Constantinople, have contributed to the chapter which I now conclude. In the original Lives of the Popes, we often discover the air and republic of Rome; and the events of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries are preserved in the rules and domestic ceremonies, which I have carefully inspected, and shall recapitulate in the order of time.

1. Monaldeschi (Ludovico Boncompagni) Fragmenta Antiquarum Romanarum, a. d. 1722, in the Scriptores Rerum Italicarum of Muratori, tom. vii. p. 423. N. B. The result of this fragment is somewhat hurt by a singular interpolation, in which the author relates his own death at the age of 115 years.
2. Fragmenta Historiarum Romanarum (vulgo Thesaurus Postolicorum), in Romana Dialectica Vulgari (a. d. 1327-1334, in Muratori, Anti-

CHAP.
LXX.

quasi, mem. Est. Italia, tom. III, p. 241-248: the authentic groundwork of the history of Rinaldi.

3. Dolpato (Gentile) Diarium Romanum (a. n. 1376-1410), in the Scripta Italica, tom. III, p. II, p. 546.

4. Antonii (Petrus) Diarius Rom. (a. n. 1404-1411), tom. XXV, p. 602.

5. Petrus (Paulus) Miscellanea Historica Romana (a. n. 1453-1460), tom. XXV, p. 1101.

6. Volterranus (Jacobus) Diarium Rom. (a. n. 1472-1484), tom. XXIII, p. 21.

7. Ameyus Diarium Urbis Romae (a. n. 1481-1487), tom. III, p. II, p. 1006.

8. Infessura (Stephanus) Diarium Romanum (a. n. 1494, or 1478-1484), tom. III, p. II, p. 1128.

9. Historia Aemulii Alexandri et, ex Excerptis ex Diario Joh. Bapt. ad II (a. n. 1462-1507), edita a Godefr. Gulielm. Lellenbus, Hannover, 1687, in 4to. The large and valuable Journal of Rinaldi might be completed from the notes in different libraries of Italy and France (M. de Fontenaygne, in the Mémoires de l'Académie Inscriptions, tom. XVII, p. 387-404).

I omit the rest, all these fragments and diaries are inserted in the collection of Muratori, my guide and master in the history of Italy. His country, and the public, are indebted to him for the following works on that subject: 1. Scripta Italica Scriptores (a. n. 500-1400), perveo pervenire pervenire pervenire, in 10 vols. in 4to, Milan, 1721-1738, 1751. A volume of chronological and alphabetical tables is still wanting as a key to this great work.

2. Antiquitates Italicae Antiquitates Italicae, 8 vols. in 4to, Milan, 1728-1741, in 73 tables Antiquitates Italicae on the manners, government, religion, &c. of the Italians of the darker ages, with a large supplement of charters, chronicles, &c. 3. Dissertationes supra la antiquitates Italicas, 2 vols. in 4to, Milan, 1751, a free version by the author, which may be quoted with the same confidence as the Latin text of the Antiquities.

4. Annali d'Italia, 18 vols. in octavo, Milan, 1753-1756, a dry though accurate and useful abridgement of the history of Italy from the birth of Christ to the middle of the eighteenth century. 5. Stell' Antichità Italiana Antichità Italiana, 2 vols. in folio, Modena, 1717, 1740.

In the history of this illustrious man, the parent of our Brunswick kings, the truth is not obscured by the loyalty or gratitude of the subject. In all his works, Muratori appears himself a diligent and laborious writer, who appears above the prejudices of a Catholic priest. He was born in the year 1677, and died in the year 1750, after passing many weary years in the libraries of Milan and Modena (Vita dei Papasio Ludovico Antonio Muratori, by his nephew and successor Gian Francesco Soli Muratori, Verona, 1756, in 4to).

CHAP. LXXI.

Prospect of the ruins of Rome in the fifteenth century.—Four causes of decay and destruction.—Example of the Coliseum.—Renovation of the city.—Conclusion of the whole work.

IN the last days of pope Eugenius the fourth, two of his servants, the learned Poggius* and a friend, ascended the Capitoline hill; reposed themselves among the ruins of columns and temples; and viewed from that commanding spot the wide and various prospect of desolation.<sup>b</sup> The place and the object gave ample scope for moralising on the vicissitudes of fortune, which spares neither man nor the proudest of his works, which buries empires and cities in a common grave; and it was agreed, that in proportion to her former greatness, the fall of Rome was the more awful and deplorable. "Her primeval state," such as she might appear in a remote age, when "Evander entertained the stranger of Troy," has

CHAP.
LXXI.

View and discourse of Poggius from the Capitoline
hill,
A. D. 1400.

* I have already (vol. 20, 21, see chap. 63) mentioned the age, character, and writings of Poggius; and particularly noticed the date of this elegant moral lecture on the variety of fortune.

<sup>b</sup> Concedimus in ipso Tarpeia arida ruina, posui in gens parva caput, et parva templi, concursum latus, phœnœque posuimus antroque columnas, nuda cingit et parva prospectus arida posui (p. 26).

<sup>c</sup> Stucco villi, 61-349. This ancient picture, as already introduced, and so exquisitely finished, must have been highly interesting to the inhabitants of Rome; and our early studies shew us to sympathise in the feelings of a Roman.

CHAP.
LXXI.

---

" been delineated by the fancy of Virgil. This
" Tarpelan rock was then a savage and solitary
" thicket: in the time of the poet, it was crowned " with the golden roofs of a temple; the temple
" is overthrown, the gold has been pillaged, the " wheel of fortune has accomplished her revolu" tion, and the sacred ground is again dis" figured with thorns and brambles. The hill of " the capital, on which we sit, was formerly the " head of the Roman empire, the citadel of the " earth, the terror of kings; illustrated by the " footsteps of so many triumphs, enriched with
" the spoils and tributes of so many nations.
" This spectacle of the world, how is it fallen!
" how changed! how defaced! the path of vic" tory is obliterated by vines, and the benches
" of the senators are concealed by a dung-" hill. Cast your eyes on the Palatine hill, and " seek among the shapeless and enormous frag" ments, the marble theatre, the obelisks, the " colossal statues, the porticoes of Nero's palace:
" survey the other hills of the city, the vacant
" space is interrupted only by ruins and gar" dens. The forum of the Roman people, where " they assembled to enact their laws and elect
" their magistrates, is now enclosed for the culti" vation of pot herbs, or thrown open for the " reception of swine and buffaloes. The public " and private edifices, that were founded for " eternity, lie prostrate, naked, and broken,
" like the limbs of a mighty giant, and the " ruin is the more visible, from the stupendous

"relics that have survived the injuries of time
"and fortune."<sup>2</sup>

CHAP.
LXXI.

His description of the ruins.

These relics are minutely described by Pogg-gius, one of the first who raised his eyes from the monuments of legendary, to those of classic, superstition.* 1. Besides a bridge, an arch, a sepulchre, and the pyramid of Cestius, he could discern, of the age of the republic, a double row of vaults, in the salt-office of the capitol, which were inscribed with the name and munificence of Catulus. 2. Eleven temples were visible in some degree, from the perfect form of the Pantheon, to the three arches and a marble column of the temple of pence, which Vespasian erected after the civil wars and the Jewish triumph. 3.
Of the number, which he rashly defines, of seven thermae or public baths, none were sufficiently entire to represent the use and distribution of the several parts: but those of Diocletian and Antoninus Caracalla still retained the titles of the founders, and astonished the curious spectator, who, in observing their solidity and extent, the variety of marbles, the size and multitude of the columns, compared the labour and expence with the use and importance.
Of the baths of Constantine, of Alexander, of Domitian, or rather of Titus, some vestige might yet be found. 4. The triumphal arches of Titus, Severus, and Constantine, were entire, both the structure and the inscriptions; a falling frag-

* Capitulum idem . . . clauduntur ut vix in senatuum pal-atium accesserint, interitumque propugnaculum iniquitatum factum. Resque ad Palatinum montem . . . vixit videri . . .
ceteros colles pariterque omnia vana edifica, ruit utroque oppata monijcia (Poggius de Variat. Fortuna, p. 21).

* See Poggius, p. 8-22.

CHAP.
LXXI

ment was honoured with the name of Trajan; and two arches, then extant, in the Flaminian way, have been ascribed to the baser memory of Faustina and Gallienus. 5. After the wonder of the Coliseum, Poggius might have overlooked a small amphitheatre of brick, most probably for the use of the praetorian camp: the theatres of Marcellus and Pompey were occupied in a great measure by public and private buildings; and in the circus, Agoualis and Maximus, little more than the situation and the form could be investigated. 6. The columns of Trajan and Antonine were still erect; but the Egyptian obelisks were broken or buried. A people of gods and heroes, the workmanship of art, was reduced to one equestrian figure of gilt brass, and to five marble statues, of which the most conspicuous were the two horses of Phidias and Praxiteles. 7. The two mausoleums or sepulchres of Augustus and Hadrian could not totally be lost; but the former was only visible as a mound of earth; and the latter, the castle of St. Angelo, had acquired the name and appearance of a modern fortress. With the addition of some separate and nameless columns, such were the remains of the ancient city: for the marks of a more recent structure might be detected in the walls, which formed a circumference of ten miles, included three hundred and seventy-nine turrets, and opened into the country by thirteen gates.

Gradual decay of Rome.

This melancholy picture was drawn above nine hundred years after the fall of the Western empire, and even of the Gothic kingdom of Italy. A long period of distress and anarchy, in which empire, and arts, and riches, had migrated from the banks of the Tyber, was incapable of restoring or adorning the city: and as all that is human must retrograde if it do not advance, every successive age must have hastened the ruin of the works of antiquity. To measure the progress of decay, and to ascertain, at each era, the state of each edifice, would be an endless and useless labour; and I shall content myself with two observations, which will introduce a short enquiry into the general causes and effects. 1. Two hundred years before the eloquent complaint of Poggius, an anonymous writer composed a description of Rome. His ignorance may repeat the same objects under strange and fabulous names. Yet this barbarous topographer had eyes and ears, he could observe the visible remains, he could listen to the tradition of the people, and he distinctly enumerates seven theatres, eleven baths, twelve arches, and eighteen palaces, of which many had disappeared before the time of Poggius. It is apparent, that many stately monuments of antiquity survived till a late period;* and that the principles of de-* Liber de Mirabilibus Rebus, ex Basilicae Sancti Cardinalis de Aragonia in Bibliotheca St. Petri, Aragoni, O. No. 62. This tract, with some short but pertinent notes, has been published by Muratori (Diachron. Historici, p. 253-261). who does not share his own critical opinion; scriptum autem estis auctoribus, et hinc non tantum antiquitas, sed insuper et, ut ab illo auctore, magis et, nullius in bello refectio, sed, quia monumenta, quae in respectu Romae imperant per modum recentis, non parum late hinc existimantur, et Romani antiquitatis indigne spectum variis [p. 259].

* The Peregrinatio Anonymi, tom. iv. p. 367, has published an anonymous picture of the sixth century, who, in his third and struction acted with vigorous and encreasing energy in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. 2. The same reflection must be applied to the three last ages; and we should vainly seek the Septizonium of Severus,* which is celebrated by Petrarch and the antiquarians of the sixteenth century. While the Roman edifices were still entire, the first blows, however weighty and impetuous, were resisted by the solidity of the mass and the harmony of the parts; but the slightest touch would precipitate the fragments of arches and columns, that already nodded to their fall.

CHAP.
LXXI

Four causes of destruction.

After a diligent enquiry, I can discern four principal causes of the ruin of Rome, which continued to operate in a period of more than a thousand years. 1. The injuries of time and nature. II. The hostile attacks of the barbarians and christians. III. The use and abuse of the materials. And IV. The domestic quarrels of the Romans.

1. The injuries of nature.

1. The art of man is able to construct monuments far more permanent than the narrow span of his own existence: yet these monuments, like himself, are perishable and frail; and in the boundless annals of time, his life and his labours must equally be measured as a fleeting moment. Of a simple and solid edifice, it is not easy, however, to circumscribe the duration. As the won-

His churches and holy places of Rome, hatched on several buildings, especially porticoes, which had disappeared before the the thirteenth century.

* On the Septizonium, see the Memoires sur Petrarque (Ann. 4. p. 222, Deonna (p. 238), and Nardini (p. 117, 214).

ders of ancient days, the pyramids<sup>1</sup> attracted the curiosity of the ancients; un hundred generations, the leaves of autumn,<sup>2</sup> have dropt into the grave; and after the fall of the Pharaohs and Ptolemies, the Casars and caliphs, the same pyramids stand erect and unshaken above the floods of the Nile. A complex figure, of various and minute parts, is more accessible to injury and decay; and the silent lapse of time is often accelerated by hurricanes and earthquakes, by fires and inundations. The air and earth have doubtless been shaken; and the lofty turrets of Rome have tottered from their foundations; but the seven hills do not appear to be placed on the great cavities of the globe; nor has the city, in any age, been exposed to the convulsions of nature, which, in the climate of Antioch, Lisbon, or Lima, have crumbled, in a few moments, the works of ages into dust. Fire is the most powerful agent of life and death; the rapid mischief may be kindled and propagated by the industry or negligence of mankind; and every period of the Roman annals is marked by the repetition of similar calamities. A memorable conflagration, the guilt or misfortune of Nero's reign, continued, though with unequal fury, either six or

CHAP.
LXXI.

hurricanes and earthquakes;

five;

<sup>1</sup> The age of the pyramids is remote and unknown, since Diodorus Siculus (tom. i. l. 1, c. 44, p. 72) is unable to decide whether they were constructed 1000 or 2400 years before the 180th Olympiad. Sir John Marsden's conjectured date of the Egyptian dynasties would fix them above 2000 years before Christ (Canon, Chronol., p. 47.)

<sup>2</sup> See the speech of Glaucus in the Iliad (v. 446). This natural and melancholy picture is familiar to Homer.

CHAP.
LXXI.

nine days.<sup>1</sup> Innumerable buildings, crowded in close and crooked streets, supplied perpetual fuel for the flames; and when they ceased, four only of the fourteen regions were left entire; three were totally destroyed, and seven were deformed by the relics of smoking and lacerated edifices.<sup>2</sup> In the full meridian of empire, the metropolis arose with fresh beauty from her ashes; yet the memory of the old deplored their irreparable losses; the acts of Greece, the trophies of victory, the monuments of primitive or fabulous antiquity. In the days of distress and anarchy, every wound is mortal, every fall irretrievable; nor can the damage be restored either by the public care of government, or the activity of private interest. Yet two causes may be alleged, which render the calamity of fire more destructive to a flourishing than a decayed city. 1. The more combustible materials of brick, timber, and metals, are first melted or consumed; but the flames may play without injury or effect on the naked walls, and mossy arches, that have been despoiled of their ornaments. It is among the common and plebeian imitations that a mischievous spark is most easily blown to a conflagration; but as soon as they are devoured, the greater edifices, which have resisted or escaped, are left as so many islands in a state of solitude and safety. From her situation, Rome is exposed to the danger, of frequent inundations. Without excepting the Tyber, the rivers that descend from either side of the Appennine have a short and irregular course; a shallow stream in the summer heats; an impetuous torrent, when it is swelled in the spring or winter, by the fall of rain, and the melting of the snows. When the current is repelled from the sea by adverse winds, when the ordinary bed is inadequate to the weight of waters, they rise above the banks, and overspread, without limits or controul, the plains and cities of the adjacent country. Soon after the triumph of the first Punic war, the Tyber was increased by unusual rains; and the inundation surpassing all former measure of time and place, destroyed all the buildings that were situate below the hills of Rome. According to the variety of ground, the same mischief was produced by different means; and the edifices were either swept away by the sudden impulse, or dissolved and undermined by the long continuance, of the flood.* Under the reign of Au-

<sup>1</sup> The burning and criticism of M. des Vignes (Histoire Critique de la République des Lettres, tom. viii, p. 114-118, ix, p. 172-187) dates the fire of Rome from a. d. 64, July 19, and the subsequent persecution of the Christians from November 13, of the same year.

<sup>2</sup> Quæque in regionibus quatuordecim Roma dividitur, quorundam quatuor intactas manserunt, tres solo ignis deformatæ, septem reliquæ paucæ tantorum vestigia supersunt, lævæ et umbrosæ. Among the old relics that were irretrievably lost, Tacitus enumerates the temple of the moon of Æsculus Tarquin; the fane and altar consecrated by Hercules præsentibus Herculis; the temple of Jupiter Stator, a row of Rostrum; the palace of Numa; the temple of Vesta cum penetrali populi Romani. He then deprecates the tyras nec victualis quantitas et Græcarum artium domus . . . omnisque quæ antea meminerat, quæ reparari nequiverat (Annal. iv, 49, 113).

CHAP.
LXXI.

Inundations.

* L. V. c. 207, repentina submersio ipsius Romæ præsentis triumphorum Romanorum . . . . diruta ignibus aquarumque clades per-struuntur.

CHAP.
LXXI.

gustus, the same calamity was renewed: the lawless river overturned the palaces and temples on its banks;" and, after the labours of the emperor in cleansing and widening the bed that was encumbered with ruins,<sup>2</sup> the vigilance of his successors was exercised by similar dangers and designs. The project of diverting into new channels the Tyber itself, or some of the dependent streams, was long opposed by superstition and local interests;<sup>3</sup> nor did the use compensate the toil and cost of the tardy and imperfect execution. The servitude of rivers is the noblest and most important victory which man has obtained over the licentiousness of na-

Armentis artem. Nam Tibris insalubris auribus imbeciles et ultis reptumque, vel flumine vel magnitudine redundans, sacra Romæ infidels in plura posita defecit. Diversis qualitates horum aliam conveniens petierunt: quoniam et quæ regulari inundatio tenet unde fuit discedit, et quæ rursus iterum iterum impetus deiecit (Oro-nus, Hist. l. iv. c. 11. p. 244, edit. Havercampi. Yet we may observe, that it is the plan and study of the christian apologist to magnify the calamities of the pagan world.

* *Vidimus sacrum Tiberis, penatibus
Littore sacro violenter unda
Its dejectum monumenta regis*

Templaque Vestæ.

(Rome, Carta l. 7).

If the palace of Numa, and temple of Vesta, were thrown down in Homer's time, what was consumed of those buildings by Nero's fire could hardly deserve the epithets of vestalities in inscriptions.

* Ad concordes inundationes ceterum Tibris haurit, ac reparavit, templumque alio relictum, et edificiorum propugnacula costructionis (structuras) in Augustis, c. 20.

* Tacitus (Annal i. 79) reports the petitions of the different towns of Italy to the senate against the measure; and we may apply the progress of reason. On a similar occasion, local interests would undoubtedly be consulted; but an English house of commons would reject with contempt the arguments of superstitious. "Our nature had assigned to the rivers their proper courses," &c.

ture; and if such were the ravages of the Tyber under a firm and active government, what could oppose, or who can enumerate, the injuries of the city after the fall of the western empire? A remedy was at length produced by the evil itself: the accumulation of rubbish, and the earth that has been washed down from the hills, is supposed to have elevated the plain of Rome, fourteen or fifteen feet perhaps, above the ancient level; and the modern city is less accessible to the attacks of the river.*

II. The crowd of writers of every nation, who impute the destruction of the Roman monuments to the Goths and the christians, have neglected to inquire how far they were animated by an hostile principle, and how far they possessed the means and the leisure to satiate their enmity. In the preceding volumes of this history, I have described the triumph of barbarism and religion; and I can only resume, in a few words, their real or imaginary connection with the ruin of ancient Rome. Our fancy may create, or adopt, a pleasing romance, that the Goths and Vandals sailed from Scandinavia, ardent to avenge the flight of

11. The hostile attacks of the barbarians and christians.

* See the Époques de la Nature of the eloquent and philosophic Buffon. His picture of Guyana in South America is that of a new and savage land, in which the waters are abandoned to themselves, without being regulated by human industry (p. 212, 261, quarto edition).

† In his Travels in Italy, Mr. Addison (this work, vol. II. p. 98, Baskerville's edition) has observed this curious and unquestionable fact.

‡ Yet in modern times, the Tyber has sometimes damaged the city; and in the years 1230, 1267, 1588, the annals of Muratori record three mischievous and memorable inundations (Hist. 217, p. 704, 409, tom. iv. p. 29, &c.).

Odin,* to break the chains, and to chastise the oppressors, of mankind; that they wished to burn the records of classic literature, and to found their national architecture on the broken members of the Tuscan and Corinthian orders. But in simple truth, the northern conquerors were neither sufficiently savage, nor sufficiently refined, to entertain such aspiring ideas of destruction and revenge. The shepherds of Scythia and Germany had been educated in the armies of the empire, whose discipline they acquired, and whose weakness they invaded: with the familiar use of the Latin tongue, they had learned to reverence the name and titles of Rome; and, though incapable of emulating, they were more inclined to admire, than to abolish, the arts and studies of a brighter period. In the transient possession of a rich and unresisting capital, the soldiers of Alaric and Genseric were stimulated by the passions of a victorious army; amidst the wanton indulgence of lust or cruelty, portable wealth was the object of their search; nor could they derive either pride or pleasure from the unprofitable reflection, that they had battered to the ground the works of the consuls and Cæsars. Their moments were indeed precious; the Goths evacuated Rome on the sixth,† the Vandals on the fifteenth, day;‡

* I take this opportunity of declaring, that in the course of twelve years I have forgotten, or misquoted, the Sight of Odin from Asaph to Sweden, which I never very strongly believed (vol. i. p. 280). The Goths are apparently Germans; but all beyond Caesar and Tacitus is darkness or fable in the antiquities of Germany.

† History of the Decline, &c. vol. v. p. 315.

‡ History of the Decline, &c. vol. vi. p. 181.

and, though it be far more difficult to build than CHAP.
to destroy, their hasty assault would have made a LXXI.
slight impression on the solid piles of antiquity.
We may remember, that both Alaric and Genseric affected to spare the buildings of the city: that they subsisted in strength and beauty under the auspicious government of Theodoric; and that the momentary resentment of Totila* was disarmed by his own temper and the advice of his friends and enemies. From these innocent barbarians, the reproach may be transferred to the catholics of Rome. The statues, altars, and houses, of the dæmons were an abomination in their eyes; and in the absolute command of the city, they might labour with zeal and perseverance to craze the idolatry of their ancestors. The demolition of the temples in the East affords to them an example of conduct; and to us an argument of belief; and it is probable, that a portion of guilt or merit may be imputed with justice to the Roman proselytes. Yet their abhorrence was confined to the monuments of heathen superstition; and the civil structures that were dedicated to the business or pleasure of society might be preserved without injury or scandal. The change of religion was accomplished, not by a popular tumult, but by the decrees of the emperors, of the senate, and of time. Of the christian hierarchy, the bishops of Rome were eimmonly the most prudent and least fanatic: nor

* History of the Decline, &c. vol. vi. p. 35-36.

_____ vol. vi. p. 343, 374.

_____ vol. v. p. 123-124.

CHAP.
LXXI.

III. The use and abuse of the materials.

can any positive charge be opposed to the meritorious act of saving and converting the majestic structure of the pantheon?

III. The value of any object that supplies the wants or pleasures of mankind is compounded of its substance and its form, of the materials and the manufacture. Its price must depend on the number of persons by whom it may be acquired and used; on the extent of the market; and consequently on the ease or difficulty of remote exportation, according to the nature of the commodity, its local situation, and the temporary circumstances of the world. The barbarian conquerors of Rome usurped in a moment the toil and treasure of successive ages; but, except the luxuries of immediate consumption, they must view without desire all that could not be removed from the city, in the Gothic waggons or the fleet of the Vandals.* Gold and silver were the first objects of their avarice; as in every country, and * Eccelem tempora patit a Phœnix principis templum quod appellatur Pantheon, in quo fuit ecclesia Sanctæ Mariæ semper virginis, et simulacrum martiris; in qua ecclesia princeps multa bona obtulit (Anastasius vel potius Liber Pontificalis in Bonifacio II, in Muratori Script. Rerum Italicarum, tom. 40, p. 1, p. 135). According to the anonymous writer in Montfaucon, the pantheon had been vowed by Agricola to Cybele and Neptune, and was dedicated by Boudica II, on the calendar of November, to the virgin, quæ per matrem equalem auctoritatem (p. 301, 309).

* Flaminio Vacca (quod Montfaucon, p. 135, 136). His Memoirs is likewise printed, pp. 21, at the end of the Roma Antica of Nardini, and several Roman, doctrinal graces, were perceived that the Goths burned their temples at Rome, and frequented the secret marks of his republicanism. He relates some anecdotes to prove that, in his own time, these places were visited and filled by the Transalpine pilgrims, the heirs of the Gothic conquerors.

in the smallest compass, they represent the most ample command of the industry and possessions of mankind. A vase or a statue of those precious metals might tempt the vanity of some barbarian chief; but the grosser multitude, regardless of the form, was tenacious only of the substance; and the melted ingots might be readily divided and stamped into the current coin of the empire. The less active, or less fortunate, robbers were reduced to the baser plunder of brass, lead, iron, and copper: whatever had escaped the Goths and Vandals was pillaged by the Greek tyrants; and the emperor Constant, in his rapacious visit, stripped the bronze tiles from the roof of the pantheon.* The edifices of Rome might be considered as a vast and various mine; the first labour of extracting the materials was already performed; the metals were purified and cast; the marbles were hewn and polished; and after foreign and domestic rapine had been satiated, the remains of the city, could a purchaser have been found, were still venal. The monuments of antiquity had been left naked of their precious ornaments, but the Romans would demolish with their own hands the arches and walls, if the hope of profit could surpass the cost of the labour and exportation. If Charlemagne had fixed in Italy the seat of the Western empire, his genius would have aspired to restore, rather than to violate, the * Simile quæ erant in ære ad ornatum exstant deposita: sed et vestigia B. Marci ad martyres quæ de regalis æneis imperia discoperunt (Anast. in Vitaban. p. 141). The base and magnificent Greek had not even the poor pretence of plundering an heathen temple: the pantheon was already a catholic church.

CHAP.
LXXI.

works of the Cæsars: but policy confined the French monarch to the forests of Germany; his taste could be gratified only by destruction; and the new palace of Aix la Chapelle was decorated with the marbles of Ravenna<sup>1</sup> and Rome.<sup>2</sup> Five hundred years after Charlemagne, a king of Sicily, Robert, the wisest and most liberal sovereign of the age, was supplied with the same materials by the easy navigation of the Tyber and the sea; and Petrarch sighs an indignant complaint, that the ancient capital of the world should adorn, from her own bowels, the slothful luxury of Naples.<sup>3</sup> But these examples of plunder or

<sup>1</sup> For the spoils of Ravenna (marbles and instruments) see the original grant of pope Adrian I. to Charlemagne (Codex Carolus. epist. lxxv. in Marten. Script. Ital. tom. iii. p. ii. p. 173).

<sup>2</sup> I shall quote the authentic testimony of the same poet G. v. 887-893, de Rubeo gente Caroli regni, l. 4, 137-140, in the Histories of France tom. v. p. 130.

*Ad quæ summos prædabat Rubea columnas, Quædam præcipuas pulchra Ravenna dedist
De xam hæcquæque potest regione venisse, Illas ætatis Francæ ferre ibi.*

And I shall add, from the Chronicle of Sigbert (Historians of France, tom. v. p. 376), various etiam Aquilegrani basilicæ plurimæ pulchre videlicet, ad ejus spectatam a Roma et Ravenna columnas et marmora derivæ fieri.

<sup>3</sup> I cannot refuse to transcribe a long passage of Petrarch (Opus. p. 624, 637, in Epistolâ hortatorie ad Nicolaum Laurentium), it is so strong and full in the point: Non pariter aut potius centenis quantitas impel opulenta hoc templum, æqueque ætas, æque pulchra regimine urbs, atque homines angustissimis hinc se ducunt; / sedem? / quoniam aut in re, turpitudine et odore humano et totius talique cetero moribus et consuetudine dissolutis, ichumens fuerit; expensis vobiscum convenient, in parietibus et stercibus atque interstitiis lapides decurrunt. Denique post et vel senis oblitusque pulchra, quæ quondam ingenuis reuerentibus viris post diuturnos ætus triumphales funderet hæcque faciem marmoream de spectu venientis et propriæ impleretur fragoribus urbis purchase were rare in the darker ages; and the Romans, alone and unenvied, might have supplied to their private or public use the remaining structures of antiquity, if, in their present form and situation, they had not been useless in a great measure to the city and its inhabitants. The walls still described the old circumference, but the city had descended from the seven hills into the campus Martius; and some of the noblest monuments, which had braved the injuries of time, were left in a desert, far remote from the habitations of mankind. The palaces of the senators were no longer adapted to the manners or fortunes of their indigent successors; the use of baths and porticoes was forgotten; in the sixth century, the games of the theatre, amphitheatre, and circus, had been interrupted: some temples were devoted to the prevailing worship; but the christian churches preferred the holy figure of the cross; and fashion, or reason, had distributed, after a peculiar model, the cells and offices of the cloister. Under the ecclesiastical reign, the number of these pious foundations was enormously multiplied; and the city was crowded with forty monasteries of quendam turpi monumentis capere non possunt. Insuper enim, hinc dolor! hic undique indigentia! ex totius christianitatis voluntate, de illiusmodi templorum sedibus usque ex arce sua constrantur devotissime Romani, de magnifico repulchramur collegibus patrum vestrorum venerabilis civis; dicitur, etiam, ut templum illorum, devotissime Neapolis adherent. Sic profecto vultus ipsa deduxit. Tui King Roberti was the friend of Petrarch.

* Tui Charlemagne married and crown at Aix la Chapelle with an hundred of his courtiers (Eginhart, c. 22, p. 108, 109, and Miræus) according, so late as the year 814, the public baths which were built at Spoleto in Italy (Amalfi, tom. 4, p. 418).

CHAP.
LXXI.

men, twenty of women, and sixty chapters and colleges of canons and priests,<sup>a</sup> who aggravated, instead of relieving, the depopulation of the tenth century. But if the forms of ancient architecture were disregarded by a people insensible of their use and beauty, the plentiful materials were applied to every call of necessity or superstition; till the fairest columns of the Ionic and Corinthian orders, the richest marbles of Paros and Numidia, were degraded, perhaps, to the support of a convent or a stable. The daily havoc which is perpetrated by the Turks in the cities of Greece and Asia may afford a melancholy example; and in the gradual destruction of the monuments of Rome, Sixtus the fifth may alone be excused for employing the stones of the Septizonium in the glorious edifice of St. Peter's.<sup>b</sup> A fragment, a ruin, howsoever mangled or profaned, may be viewed with pleasure and regret; but the greater part of the marble was deprived of substance, as well as of place and proportion; it was burnt to lime for the purpose of cement. Since the arrival of Poggius, the temple of Concord,<sup>c</sup> and many capital structures, had vanished from his eyes; and an epigram of the same age expresses a just and pious fear, that the continuance of this practice would finally annihilate all the monuments of antiquity.* The smallness of their numbers was the sole check on the demands and depredations of the Romans. The imagination of Petrarch might create the presence of a mighty people;† and I hesitate to believe, that even in the fourteenth century, they could be reduced to a contemptible list of thirty-three thousand inhabitants. From that period to the reign of Leo the tenth, if they multiplied to the amount of eight-five thousand,‡ the encrease of citizens was, in some degree, pernicious to the ancient city.

<sup>a</sup> See the Annals of Italy, a. n. 988. For this and the preceding fact, Muratori himself is indebted to the Benedictine history of Pire Maritima.

<sup>b</sup> Vita di Sisto Quinto, da Gregorio Leti, tom. III. p. 561.

<sup>c</sup> Porticus ante Concordiam, quam cum primis ad usum ecclesiæ videtur fuisse integrum quæque maxime altitudinis speciosa: Rursus postmodum ad calcem veluti intus et parvæ porticus disjectis columnis sunt demoliti (p. 17). The temple of Concord was therefore not destroyed by a sedition in the thirteenth century, as I have read in a traite des lois du Gouvernement civil de Rome, but the formerly at Rome, and ascribed (I believe falsely) to the celebrated Giovanni. Poggius likewise asserts, that the sepulchre of Cecilia Metella was burnt for lime (p. 17, 20).

iv. I have reserved for the last, the most potent and forcible cause of destruction, the domestic hostilities of the Romans themselves. Under the dominion of the Greek and French emperors, the peace of the city was disturbed by accidental, though frequent, seditions; it is from the decline of the latter, from the beginning of the tenth

iv. The domestic quarrels of the Romans.

* Composed by Ennius Sylvius, afterwards pope Pius ii, and published by Mabillon from a MS. of the queen of Sweden (Museum Italicum, tom. i. p. 97).

*Odientat me, Roma, sine spectare ruinas:
Ex ejus lapidū gloria prius erat.
Sed nunc hoc populus munus debemus reuerſa
Calce in obsequium nostrum duci equum
Impia terrentium si sit pars egerit annis Nullum hinc militem nobilitatis erit.*

† Vagabundus pater in illa urbe tam magnū que, cum properaretur comes elaterrino, peccatis habet licentiam (Voss. p. 166, Epist. Famil. lib. ii. 14).

‡ These names of the population of Rome at different periods are derived from an ingenious treatise of the physician Lauchol, du Hamel Capit. Qualifications pp. 122.

CHAP.
LXXXI.

century, that we may date the licentiousness of private war, which violated with impunity the laws of the code and the gospel; without respecting the majesty of the absent sovereign, or the presence and person of the vicar of Christ. In a dark period of five hundred years, Rome was perpetually afflicted by the sanguinary quarrels of the nobles and the people, the Guelphs and Ghibelines, the Colonna and Ursini; and if much has escaped the knowledge, and much is unworthy of the notice, of history, I have exposed, in the two preceding chapters, the causes and effects of the public disorders. At such a time, when every quarrel was decided by the sword, and none could trust their lives or properties to the impotence of law, the powerful citizens were armed for safety or offence, against the domestic enemies, whom they feared or hated. Except Venice alone, the same dangers and designs were common to all the free republics of Italy; and the nobles usurped the prerogative of fortifying their houses, and erecting strong towers<sup>1</sup> that were capable of resisting a sudden attack. The cities were filled with these hostile edifices; and the example of Lucca, which contained three hundred towers; her law which confined their heights to the measure of fourscore feet, may be extended with suitable latitude to the more opulent and populous states. The first step of the senator Brancalcione in the establishment of peace and justice, was to demolish (as we have already seen) one hundred and forty of the towers of Rome; and, in the last days of anarchy and discord, as late as the reign of Martin the fifth, forty-four still stood in one of the thirteen or fourteen regions of the city. To this mischievous purpose, the remains of antiquity were most readily adapted: the temples and arches afforded a broad and solid basis for the new structures of brick and stone; and we can name the modern turrets that were raised on the triumphal monuments of Julius Caesar, Titus, and the Antonines.* With some slight alterations, a theatre, an amphitheatre, a mausoleum, was transformed into a strong and spacious citadel. I need not repeat, that the mole of Adrian has assumed the title and form of the castle of St. Angelo; the septizonium of Severus was capable of standing against a royal army; the sepulchre of Metella has sunk under its outworks; the theatres of Pompey and Marcellus

<sup>1</sup> All the facts that relate to the towers at Florence, and in other free cities of Italy, may be found in the laborious and entertaining compilation of Muratori, Antiquitates Italice medii ævi, Glæssat. xxi. Com. ii. p. 493-499 of the Latin, tom. i. p. 446 of the Italian works.

[illegible]

* Modicum malum . . . magis ex parte Romanorum ingratum . . . distulit; quod certe tantum evenisset, si eorum animis parva, attingere granditus mala, cuique visus esset illis (Poeschl de Varietate Fortunae, p. 17)

* Against the emperor Henry IV (Muratori, Annali d'Italia, tom. 24, p. 147).

* I must copy an important passage of Montfaucon: Turris legens rotunda . . . . Campana Minerva . . . . arboribus ornata, ceteris muris non solida, et spatiosa perquam minimam inter turres superans: et Turris de Bona fide, et domi capitibus mure inscripta. Hanc equi-

CHAP.
LXXI.

were occupied by the Savelli and Ursini families;* and the rough fortress had been gradually softened to the splendour and elegance of an Italian palace. Even the churches were encompassed with arms and bulwarks, and the military engines on the roof of St. Peter's were the terror of the Vatican and the scandal of the christian world. Whatever is fortified will be attacked; and whatever is attacked may be destroyed. Could the Romans have wrested from the popes the castle of St. Angelo, they had resolved, by a public decree, to annihilate that monument of servitude. Every building of defence was exposed to a siege; and in every siege the arts and engines of destruction were laboriously employed. After the death of Nicholas the fourth, Rome, without a sovereign or a senate, was abandoned six months to the fury of civil war. "The houses," says a cardinal and poet of the times,† "were crushed by the weight and

et sic, semper intentum bellum, cum urbeula adjuncta fuit, cuius moenia et latus circumum viantur; ut in sepulchrum Marce quod ara oppiduli fuit. Ferrumque in arte paratiss, cum Ursini atque Columnatus mutua rivalibus perniciem inferrent civitati, in utroque parte ditamem cedere magis amentum erat (p. 182).

* See the testimonies of Donatus, Nardini, and Montfaucon. In the Savelli palace, the remains of the theatre of Marcellus are still great and conspicuous.

† James cardinal of St. George, ad eodem sacrum, in his theoretical life of pope Celestin (Munster, Script. Ital. tom. 1, p. 114, p. 691, l. 1, c. 1, sec. 132, &c.).

*Hec disces sat est. Romanis carulis scilicet Munibus exerts hoc sed i belloque vocatum / vocatus /
In oculis, in oculis fraternisque vulnera patris;
Terminata pacem viros humanis armis;
Partibus domus trepidum, scilicet ruina
Ignibus i lumen fides, amantibus fides
Lumina videri, quo sit spoliata regilla.*

“velocity of enormous stones;” the walls were “perforated by the strokes of the battering-ram;
 “the towers were involved in fire and smoke;
 “and the assailants were stimulated by rapine “and revenge.” The work was consummated by the tyranny of the laws; and the factions of Italy alternately exercised a blind and thoughtless vengeance on their adversaries, whose houses and castles they razed to the ground.* In comparing the days of foreign, with the ages of domestic hostility, we must pronounce, that the latter have been far more ruinous to the city; and our opinion is confirmed by the evidence of Petrarch. “Behold,” says the laureat, “the relics of Rome, “the image of her pristine greatness! neither “time, nor the barbarian, can boast the merit of “this stupendous destruction: it was perpetrated “by her own citizens, by the most illustrious of “her sons; and your ancestors (he writes to a “noble Annibaldi) have done with the battering“ram, what the Punic hero could not accomplish “with the sword.”† The influence of the two last principles of decay must in some degree be mul-

* Muratori (Dissertationes supra in Antiquità Italiane, tom. 1, p. 427-431) finds, that stone bullets of two or three hundred pounds weight were not uncommon; and they are sometimes reported as twelve or eighteen centars of Genoa, each centar weighing 160 pounds.

† The sixth law of the Visconti prohibits this coarse and mischievous practice; and strictly enjoins, that the houses of beheaded citizens should be preserved per communal utilitate (Guaracorum de la Flamma, in Muratori, Script. Beron. Insularum, tom. xii, p. 1041).

‡ Petrarch thus addresses his friend, who, with shame and tears, had shown him the moulds, lacern specimens miserable Rome, and de-

CHAP.
LXXI.

The Colosseum or amphitheatre of Titus.

multiplied by each other; since the houses and towers, which were subverted by civil war, required a new and perpetual supply from the monuments of antiquity.

These general observations may be separately applied to the amphitheatre of Titus, which has obtained the name of the Coliseum,* either from its magnitude, or from Nero's colossal statue; an edifice, had it been left to time and nature, which might perhaps have claimed an eternal duration. The curious antiquaries, who have computed the numbers and seats, are disposed to believe, that above the upper row of stone steps, the amphitheatre was encircled and elevated with several stages of wooden galleries, which were repeatedly consumed by fire, and restored by the emperors. Whatever was precious, or portable, or profane, the statues of gods and heroes, and the costly ornaments of sculpture, which were cast in brass, or overspread with leaves of silver and clared his own intention of restoring them (Carmina Latina, l. 5, epist. Ponto Anthonium, iii, p. 81, 88).

Nec te parva moestis meritis fama refulsit
Quanto quod Integre fuit olim gloria Romæ
Reliquis instantot addite : quas longior ætas
Fringere non vahet : non illi aut ira eruent Hæc, ab egregiis frangitur civibus, hæc ! hæc !
—— Quod ille nequit (Hamlet)
Perfuit hic ætas. ———

* The fourth part of the Vernus Illustrata of the Marquis Maffei, professes to treat of amphitheatres, particularly those of Rome and Verona, of their dimensions, wooden galleries, &c. It is from magnitude that he derives the name of Colosseum, or Coliseum : since the same appellation was applied to the amphitheatre of Capua, without the aid of a colossal statue ; since that of Nero was erected in the court (a atrio) of his palace, and not in the Coliseum (p. 17, p. 13-19, l. 1, c. 4).

gold, became the first prey of conquest or fanaticism, of the avarice of the barbarians or the christians. In the massy stones of the Coliseum, many holes are discerned; and the two most probable conjectures represent the various accidents of its decay. These stones were connected by solid links of brass or iron; nor had the eye of rapine overlooked the value of the baser metals;* the vacant space was converted into a fair or market: the artisans of the Coliseum are mentioned in an ancient survey; and the chasms were perforated or enlarged to receive the poles that supported the shops or tents of the mechanic trades.† Reduced to its naked majesty, the Flavian amphitheatre was contemplated with awe and admiration by the pilgrims of the north; and their rude enthusiasm broke forth in a sublime proverbial expression, which is recorded in the eighth century, in the fragments of the venerable Bede: "As long as the Coliseum stands, Rome shall stand; when the Coliseum falls, Rome will fall; when Rome falls, the world will fall."‡ In the modern system of war, a situation commanded by three * Joseph Maria Summo, a learned bishop, and the author of an history of Proconeste, has composed a separate dissertation on the several or eight probable causes of these holes, which has been since reprinted in the Romum Thesaurus of Salengre. Monifaccon (Diarium, p. 213) ascribes the rapine of the barbarians to be the most germane cause of ruin.

† Donatus, Roma Vetus et Nova, p. 262.

‡ Quemadmodum stabit Colyseus, stabit et Roma; quando cadet Colyseus, cadet Roma; quando cadet Roma, cadet et mundus (found in Excerptis una Callertanensi apud Dionysii Glossar. med. et infimæ Latinitatis, tom. II, p. 407, edit. Basili). This saying must be ascribed to the Anglo-Saxon pilgrims who visited Rome before the year 733, the era of Bede's death; for I do not believe that our venerable monk ever passed the sea.

hills would not be chosen for a fortress; but the strength of the walls and arches could resist the engines of assault; a numerous garrison might be lodged in the inclosure; and while one faction occupied the Vatican and the Capitol, the other was entrenched in the Lateran and the Coliseum.*

The abolition at Rome of the ancient games must be understood with some latitude; and the carnival sports of the Testaccan mount and the circus Agonalis,<sup>b</sup> were regulated by the law<sup>c</sup> or custom of the city. The senator presided with dignity and pomp to adjudge and distribute the prizes, the gold ring, or the pallium,<sup>d</sup> as it was styled, of cloth or silk. A tribute on the Jews supplied the annual expence;<sup>e</sup> and the races, on

* I cannot recover, in Muratori's original Lives of the Popes (Script. Rerum Italicarum, tom. iii, p. vi), the passage that attests this double partition, which must be applied to the end of the seventh or the beginning of the twelfth century.

<sup>b</sup> Although the structure of the circus Agonalis be destroyed, it still retains its form and name (Agona, Negona, Natona); and the interior space affords a sufficient level for the purpose of racing. But the Monte Testaccio, that strange pile of broken pottery, seems only adapted for the annual practice of hurling from top to bottom some waggish loads of lira bags for the diversion of the populace (Statuta Urbis Romæ, p. 126).

<sup>c</sup> See the Statuta Urbis Romæ, l. iii, c. 67, 68, 69; p. 185, 186. There already given an idea of this municipal code. The races of Negona and Natona Testaccio are likewise mentioned in the Diary of Peter Ambrosius, from 1464 to 1477 (Muratori, Script. Rerum Italicarum, tom. xiv, p. 1134).

<sup>d</sup> The Pallium, which Mæzerus foolishly derives from Palmarium, is an easy example of the way and the words, from the robe or cloak, to the materials, and from thence to their application as a prize (Muratori, dissent. xxviii).

<sup>e</sup> For these expences, the Jews of Rome paid each year 1120 sains, of which the old ducty represented the pieces of silver for which foot, on horseback, or in chariots, were ennobled by a tilt and tournament of seventy-two of the Roman youth. In the year one thousand three hundred and thirty-two, a bull-feast, after the fashion of the Moors and Spaniards, was celebrated in the Coliseum itself; and the living manners are painted in a diary of the times.<sup>m</sup> A convenient order of benches was restored; and a general proclamation, as far as Ripini and Ravenna, invited the nobles to exercise their skill and courage in this perilous adventure. The Roman ladies were marshalled in three squadrons, and seated in three balconies, which on this day, the third of September, were lined with scarlet cloth. The fair Jacova di Rovere, led the matrons from beyond the Tyber, a pure and native race, who still represent the features and character of antiquity. The remainder of the city was divided as usual between the Colonna and Ursini: the two factions were proud of the number and beauty of their female bands: the charms of Savella Ursini are mentioned with praise; and the Colonna regretted the absence of the youngest of their house, who had sprained her ankle in the garden of Nero's tower. The lots of the champions were which Judas had betrayed his master to their pursuers. There was a foot-race of Jewish, as well as of christian youths (Statius Ubi, Olibani).

<sup>m</sup> This extraordinary bull-feast in the Colosseum is described, from tradition rather than memory, by Ludovico Biondino Montalano, in the most ancient fragments of Roman annals (Ulpianus, Script. Berni Holstenius, torn. xii, p. 225, 226); and however fanciful they may seem, they are deeply marked with the colours of truth and nature.

CHAP.
LXXI.

drawn by an old and respectable citizen; and they descended into the arena, or pit, to encounter the wild bulls, on foot, as it should seem, with a single spear. Amidst the crowd, our annalist has selected the names, colours, and devices, of twenty of the most conspicuous knights. Several of the names are the most illustrious of Rome and the ecclesiastical state; Malatesta, Polenta, della Valle, Casarello, Savelli, Capoccio, Conti, Annahaldi, Altieri, Corsi; the colours were adapted to their taste and situation; the devices are expressive of hope or despair, and breathe the spirit of gallantry and arms. "I am alone like the youngest of the Horatii," the confidence of an intrepid stranger: "I live disconsolate," a weeping widower: "I burn under the ashes," a discreet lover: "I adore Lavinia, or Lucretia," the ambiguous declaration of a modern passion; "My faith is as pure," the motto of a white livery: "Who is stronger than myself?" of a lion's hide: "If I am drowned in blood, what a pleasant death," the wish of ferocious courage. The pride or prudence of the Ursini restrained them from the field, which was occupied by three of their hereditary rivals, whose inscriptions denoted the lofty greatness of the Colonna name: "Though sad, I am strong:" "Strong as I am great:" "If I fall," addressing himself to the spectators, "you fall with me:"—intimating (says the contemporary writer) that while the other families were the subjects of the Vatican, they alone were the supporters of the capitol. The combats of the amphitheatre were dangerous and bloody. Every champion successively encountered a wild bull; and the victory may be ascribed to the quadropeds, since no more than eleven were left on the field, with the loss of nine wounded and eighteen killed on the side of their adversaries. Some of the noblest families might mourn, but the pomp of the funerals, in the churches of St. John Lateran and St. Maria Maggiore, afforded a second holiday to the people. Doubtless it was not in such conflicts that the blood of the Romans should have been shed; yet, in blaming their rashness, we are compelled to applaud their gallantry; and the noble volunteers, who display their magnificence, and risk their lives, under the balconies of the fair, excite a more generous sympathy than the thousands of captives and malefactors who were reluctantly dragged to the scene of slaughter.*

This use of the amphitheatre was a rare, perhaps a singular, festival; the demand for the materials was a daily and continual want, which the citizens could gratify without restraint or remorse. In the fourteenth century, a scandalous act of concord secured to both factions the privilege of extracting stones from the free and common quarry of the Coliseum;† and Poggius laments that the greater part of these stones had been burnt to lime by the folly of the Ro-

* Muratori has given a separate dissertation (the twenty-ninth) to the games of the Romans in the middle ages.

† In a common but instructive memoir, the abbé Bartholomy (Mémoires de l'Académie des Inscriptions, tom. xviii. p. 383) has mentioned this agreement of the factions of the fourteenth century, de Tibulline factions in the Coliseum, from an original act in the archives of Rome.

monks.<sup>7</sup> To check this abuse, and to prevent the nocturnal crimes that might be perpetrated in the vast and gloomy recess, Eugenius the fourth surrounded it with a wall; and by a charter long extant, granted both the ground and edifice to the monks of an adjacent convent.<sup>8</sup> After his death, the wall was overthrown in a tumult of the people; and had they themselves respected the noblest monument of their fathers, they might have justified the resolve that it should never be degraded to private property. The inside was damaged; but in the middle of the sixteenth century, an era of taste and learning, the exterior circumference of one thousand six hundred and twelve feet was still entire and inviolate; a triple elevation of fourscore arches, which rose to the height of one hundred and eight feet. Of the present ruin, the nephews of Paul the third are the guilty agents; and every traveller who views the Farnese palace may curse the sacrilege and luxury of these upstart princes.<sup>9</sup> A similar re-

<sup>7</sup> Cellarius . . . ob constitutum Monasterium negat ex parte ad palatium delatum, says the indignant Poggius (p. 177); but his expression, too strong for the present age, must be very tenderly applied to the sixteenth century.

<sup>8</sup> Of the Order of monks, Montfaucon (p. 142) affirms this fact from the memorials of Placidius Vices (No. 73). They still hoped, on some future occasion, to restore and enlarge their ground.

<sup>9</sup> After mentioning the palace compunctuati gym, Montfaucon (p. 142) only adds, that it was entire under Paul iii. taetula elegant. Muratori (Anecd. Italica, tom. xiv, p. 311) more freely reports the guilt of the Farnese pope, and the indignation of the Roman people, Against the nephews of Urban viii. I have no other advice than the vulgar saying, "Quid nos Innocentia ducunt, bene Barba," which was perhaps suggested by the resemblance of the words.

proach is applied to the Barberini; and the repetition of injury might be dreaded from every reign, till the Coliseum was placed under the safeguard of religion by the most liberal of the pontiffs, Benedict the fourteenth, who consecrated a spot which persecution and sabbé had stained with the blood of so many christian martyrs.*

When Petrarch first gratified his eyes with a view of those monuments, whose scattered fragments so far surpass the most eloquent descriptions, he was astonished at the supine indifference of the Romans themselves:† he was humbled rather than elated by the discovery, that except his friend Rienzi and one of the Colonna, a stranger of the Rhone was more conversant with these antiquities than the nobles and natives of the metropolis.‡ The ignorance and credulity of the Romans are elaborately displayed in the old survey of the city, which was composed about the

* As an antiquarian and a priest, Montfaucon then deprecates the ruin of the Coliseum: Quod si non singulis mœtibus atque pœnebusculis aliquam fulent quod impioque solvere mœnia, indigna res atque in laudem tot martyrum cenare sacrum tantopere sacrum non.

† Yet the statutes of Rome II. iii. c. 81, p. 188) impose a tax of 100 aures on whomsoever shall diminish any ancient edifice, or ruin a civilis edificium, et ut antiqua ædificia decoris urbis perpetuo representent.

‡ In his first visit to Rome (a. p. 1337, see Mémoires sur Pétrarque, tom. I, p. 322, &c.) Petrarch observed multa pœnebuscula tantum tantum, et stupida mole clementia . . . Presentia vero, subita stetit, nihil immutata: vix major fuit Regia majestatesque sunt reliquæ quam solent. Jam non extant ab ille urbe domitium, sed tam erant domitium, mire (Opp. p. 602. Familiaris, II, 14. Joanni Colonna).

* He excepts and praises the rare knowledge of Jules Colonna. Qui ex his hinc magis ignis rerum Romanarum, quam Romanus civis? Locutus dico nunquam minus Romanus cognoscitur quam Romanus.

beginning of the thirteenth century; and without dwelling on the manifold errors of name and place, the legend of the capitol<sup>2</sup> may provoke a smile of contempt and indignation. "The capitol," says the anonymous writer, "is so named "as being the head of the world; where the "consuls and senators formerly resided for the "government of the city and the globe. The "strong and lofty walls were covered with glass "and gold, and crowned with a roof of the "richest and most curious carving. Below the "citadel stood a palace, of gold for the greatest "part, decorated with precious stones, and whose "value might be esteemed at one third of the "world itself. The statues of all the provinces "were arranged in order; each with a small bell "suspended from its neck; and such was the "contrivance of art magic," that if the province "rebelled against Rome, the statue turned round

<sup>2</sup> After the description of the capitol, he adds, *statue erant quæ erant mundi gubernantes; et habebant quædam thesaurorum ad regnum. Et erant ita per magicam artem dispositæ, ut quicquid aliqua regio Romanæ imperiæ rebellis esset, statim lingua illius provincie vertebat se contra illam; unde thesaurorum resonabat quod pendebat ad collum; tumque vana capitolii quæ erant custodes senatus, &c. He mentions as examples of the Saxons and Suevi, who after they had been subdued by Agrippa, again rebelled: thesaurorum sonitum; sacrorum quæ erant in specula in habebant semper ita mutabatur; Agrippa marchæ factæ et reducere illas—Persians (Anonym. in Montfaucon, p. 297, 299).*

<sup>3</sup> The same writer affirms, that Virgil captures a Roman's inviolable exult, velique Næpoleon. A Roman magician, in the eleventh century, is introduced by William of Malmshury (de Gestis Regum Anglorum, l. ii, p. 86); and in the time of Flaminio Vico (N. 21, 103), it was the vulgar belief that the strangers (the Carlo) invoked the demons for the discovery of hidden treasures.

" to that quarter of the heavens, the bell rang, CHAP. LXXI.
 " the prophet of the capitol reported the prodigy,
 " and the senate was admonished of the impending danger." A second example of less importance, though of equal absurdity, may be drawn from the two marble horses, led by two naked youths, which have since been transported from the baths of Constantine to the Quirinal hill. The groundless application of the name of Phidias and Praxiteles may perhaps be excused; but these Grecian sculptors should not have been removed above four hundred years from the age of Pericles to that of Tiberius: they should not have been transformed into two philosophers or magicians, whose nakedness was the symbol of truth and knowledge, who revealed to the emperor his most secret actions; and, after refusing all pecuniary recompence, solicited the honour of leaving this eternal monument of themselves.* Thus awake to the power of magic, the Romans were insensible to the beauties of art: no more than five statues were visible to the eyes of Poggius; and of the multitudes which chance or design had buried under the ruins, the resurrection was fortunately delayed till a safer and more enlightened age.<sup>b</sup> The Nile, which now adorns

* Anonym. p. 349. Maffei (p. 191) justly observes, that if Alexander be represented, those statues cannot be the work of Phidias (Olympical hexail) or Praxiteles (Olympical civ), who lived before that conqueror (Phil. Hist. Nat. xix. 19).

<sup>b</sup> William of Malmesbury (l. ii. p. 86, 87) relates a marvellous discovery (s. c. 1048) of Pallan, the son of Eusebius, who had been slain by Tullius: the perpetual light in his sepulchre; a Latin epitaph; the corpse, yet entire, of a young giant; the monument wound in his arms

CHAP.
LXXXI.

the Vatican, had been explored by some labourers, in digging a vineyard near the temple, or convent, of the Minerva; but the impatient proprietor, who was tormented by some visits of curiosity, restored the unprofitable marble to its former grave. The discovery of a statue of Pompey, ten feet in length, was the occasion of a law-suit. It had been found under a partition-wall: the equitable judge had pronounced, that the head should be separated from the body to satisfy the claims of the contiguous owners; and the sentence would have been executed, if the intercession of a cardinal, and the liberality of a pope, had not rescued the Roman hero from the hands of his barbarous countrymen.<sup>a</sup>

Restoration and ornaments of the city, A. D. 1430, &c.

But the clouds of barbarism were gradually dispelled: and the peaceful authority of Martin the fifth and his successors restored the ornaments of the city as well as the order of the ecclesiastical state. The improvements of Rome, since the fifteenth century, have not been the spontaneous produce of freedom and industry. The first and most natural root of a great city is the labour and populousness of the adjacent country, which breast (pectus perfert ingens) &c. If this statue rests on the slightest foundation, we may pity the bodies, as well as the statues, that were exposed to the air in a barbarous age.

<sup>a</sup> Prope portum Minervæ, tunc est recubans, cuius equi integri adhuc hinc ungulantes, ut signa membra excedat. Quidam ad plantarum arborescens sceleris fecerunt detegit. Ad hoc circumdant complures in dies magis reventerent, et opitum advenitiam facillitatemque perierunt, licet partibus congesta hinc testis (Poggius de Varietate Curie, p. 17).

<sup>b</sup> See the Memoriale of Flaminio Vacca, No. 51, p. 11, 12, at the end of the Roma Antica of Nardus (1704, in 4to).

supplies the materials of subsistence, of manufactures, and of foreign trade. But the greater part of the Campagna of Rome is reduced to a dreary and desolate wilderness: the overgrown estates of the princes and the clergy are cultivated by the lazy hands of indigent and hopeless vassals; and the scanty harvests are confined or exported for the benefit of a monopoly. A second and more artificial cause of the growth of a metropolis is the residence of a monarch, the expence of a luxurious court, and the tributes of dependent provinces. These provinces and tributes had been lost in the fall of the empire; and if some streams of the silver of Peru and the gold of Brasil have been attracted by the Vatican, the revenues of the cardinals, the fees of office, the oblations of pilgrims and clients, and the remnant of ecclesiastical taxes, afford a poor and precarious supply, which maintains however the idleness of the court and city. The population of Rome, far below the measure of the great capitals of Europe, does not exceed one hundred and seventy thousand inhabitants,* and within the spacious inclosure of the walls, the largest portion of the seven hills is overspread with vineyards and ruins. The beauty and splendour of the modern city may be ascribed to the abuses of the government, to the influence of superstition. Each reign (the exceptions are rare)

* In the year 1707, the inhabitants of Rome (without including eight or ten thousand Jews) amounted to 139,500 souls (Lambert, Voyages en Espagne et en Italie, tome III, p. 217, 218). In 1740 they had increased to 146,000; and in 1784, I left them, without the Jews, 161,495. I am ignorant whether they have since continued in a progressive state.

CHAP.
LXXI.

---

has been marked by the rapid elevation of a new family, enriched by the childless pontiff, at the expence of the church and country. The palaces of these fortunate nephews are the most costly monuments of elegance and servitude; the perfect arts of architecture, painting, and sculpture, have been prostituted in their service, and their galleries and gardens are decorated with the most precious works of antiquity, which taste or vanity has prompted them to collect. The ecclesiastical revenues were more decently employed by the popes themselves in the pomp of the catholic worship; but it is superfluous to enumerate their pious foundations of altars, chapels, and churches, since these lesser stars are eclipsed by the sun of the Vatican, by the dome of St. Peter, the most glorious structure that ever has been applied to the use of religion. The fame of Julius the second, Leo the tenth, and Sixtus the fifth, is accompanied by the superior merit of Bramante and Fontana, of Raphael and Michael-Angelo; and the same munificence which had been displayed in palaces and temples was directed with equal zeal to revive and emulate the labours of antiquity. Prostrate obelisks were raised from the ground, and erected in the most conspicuous places; of the eleven aqueducts of the Caesars and consuls, three were restored; the artificial rivers were conducted over a long series of old, or of new arches, to discharge into marble basins a flood of salubrious and refreshing waters; and the spectator, impatient to ascend the steps of St. Peter's, is detained by a column of Egyptian granite, which rises between two lofty and perpetual fountains, to the height of one hundred and twenty feet. The map, the description, the monuments, of ancient Rome have been elucidated by the diligence of the antiquarian and the student<sup>2</sup> and the footsteps of heroes, the relics, not of superstition, but of empire, are devoutly visited by a new race of pilgrims from the remote, and once savage, countries of the North.

CHAP.
LXXI.

Of these pilgrims, and of every reader, the attention will be excited by an history of the decline and fall of the Roman empire; the greatest, perhaps, and most awful scene, in the history of mankind. The various causes and progressive effects are connected with many of the events

Final conclusion.

<sup>2</sup> The P<sup>r</sup>er. Montfaucon distributes his own observations into twenty days, he should have styled them weeks, or months, of his visits to the different parts of the city (Diarium Italicum, v. 8-81, p. 104-201). That learned Benedictine reviews the topography of ancient Rome; the best efforts of Blonden, Fulvius, Martinius, and Fournier, the superior labours of Pyrrhus Ligorio, had his learning been equal to his labours; the writings of Onuphrius Panvinus, quoniam obscuravit, and the recent but imperfect books of Domatius and Marsili. Yet Montfaucon still sighs for a more complete plan and description of the old city, which must be attained by the three following methods: 1. The measurement of the space and intervals of the ruins. 2. The study of inscriptions, and the places where they were found. 3. The investigation of all the arts, charts, diaries, of the middle ages, which name any spot or building of Rome. The laborious work, such as Montfaucon desired, must be promoted by princely or public munificence; but the great modern plan of Nelli (i. e. 1786) would furnish a solid and accurate basis for the ancient topography of Rome.

CHAP.
LXXI.

---

most interesting in human annals: the artful policy of the Cæsars, who long maintained the name and image of a free republic; the disorder of military despotism; the rise, establishment, and sects, of christianity; the foundation of Constantinople; the division of the monarchy; the invasion and settlements of the barbarians of Germany and Scythia; the institutions of the civil law; the character and religion of Mahomet; the temporal sovereignty of the popes; the restoration and decay of the Western empire of Charlemagne; the crusades of the Latins in the East; the conquests of the Saracens and Turks; the ruin of the Greek empire; the state and revolutions of Rome in the middle age. The historian may applaud the importance and variety of his subject; but, while he is conscious of his own imperfections, he must often accuse the deficiency of his materials. It was among the ruins of the capital, that I first conceived the idea of a work which has amused and exercised near twenty years of my life; and which, however inadequate to my own wishes, I finally deliver to the curiosity and candour of the public.

LAPLAINTE,
JUNE VI, 1787.

GENERAL INDEX.

N. B. The Roman Numerals refer to the Volume, and the Figures to the Page.

A

- AbdAN*, the Saracen, husband of his widow, ix, 393.
Abbasides, elevation of the house of, to the office of caliph of the Saracens, x, 25.
Abdallah, the Saracen, his excursion to plunder the fair of Abyla, ix, 400. His African expedition, 401.
Abdalgalek, caliph of the Saracens, refuses tribute to the emperor of Constantinople, and establishes a national mint, x, 7.
Abdalmalik, the Saracen, establishes his throne at Cordova in Spain, ii, 34. Splendour of his court, 37. His estimate of his happiness, 39.
Abdelaziz, the Saracen, his treaty with Throdemir the Gothic prince of Spain, ix, 481, 482. His death, 485.
Abderamus, his expedition to France, and victories there, x, 21. His death, 26.
Abdel Metalleb, the grandfather of the prophet Mahomet, his history, ix, 253.
Abgarus, inquiry into the authenticity of his correspondence with Jesus Christ, ix, 117.
Abgarus, the last king of Edessa, sent in chains to Rome, i, 235.
Ablunus, the confidential prefect under Constantine the Great, a conspiracy formed against him on that emperor's death, iii, 130. Is put to death, 132.
Abu Ayub, his history, and the veneration paid to his memory by the Mahometans, x, 5; xii, 944.
Abubeker, the friend of Mahomet, is one of his first converts, ix, 283. Flies from Mecca with him, 288. Succeeds Mahomet as caliph of the Saracens, 339. His character, 358.
Abu Gash commands the Antalusian Moors who subdued the island of Crete, x, 58.
Abu Sophian, prince of Mecca, conspires the death of Mahomet, ix, 288. Battles of Bedar and Ohed, 298-301. Besieges Medina without success, 301. Surrenders Mecca to Mahomet, and receives him as a prophet, 307.

- Archbishop of Milan, 38. Opposes the Arian worship of the empress Justinia, 39. Refuses obedience to the imperial power, 45. Controls the emperor Theodosius, 68, 69. Imposes penance on Theodosius for his cruel treatment of Thessalonica, 71. Employed his influence over Gratian and Theodosius, to inspire them with maxims of persecution, 111. Opposes Symmachus, the advocate for the old pagan religion, 119. Comforts the citizens of Florence with a dream, when besieged by Radagaisus, 218.
- Arzila*, siege of, by Sapor king of Persia, iii, 205. Receives the fugitive inhabitants of Nisibis, iv, 220. Is besieged and taken by Cabades king of Persia, vii, 138.
- Asar*, prince of Ionia, his character, and passage into Europe, xi, 458.
- Ammianus* the historian, his religious character of the emperor Constantius, iii, 352. His remark on the enmity of Christians towards each other, 405. His account of the fiery obstructions to restoring the temple of Jerusalem, iv, 103. His account of the hostile contest of Damasus and Ursinus for the bishopric of Rome, iv, 274. Testimony in favour of his historical merit, 427. His character of the nobles of Rome, v, 267.
- Armenius*, the mathematician, his measurement of the circuit of Rome, v, 287.
- Armenius*, the monk of Alexandria, his martyrdom, viii, 280.
- Asiatic*, siege and destruction of, by the caliph Motawem, x, 69.
- Aspidochelone*, bishop of Iconium, gains the favour of the emperor Theodosius by an orthodox bow meo, v, 16.
- Aspitholater* at Rome, a description of, ii, 103; xii, 416.
- Aurora*, his birth and character, ix, 425. His invasion and conquest of Egypt, 429. His administration there, 443. His description of the country, 446.
- Aurazâ I*, sultan of the Turks, his reign, xi, 444.
- Aurazâ II*, sultan, his reign and character, xii, 150.
- Ascheroz*, in arabian history, described, vi, 263.
- Asceltor*, pope, his Jewish extraction, xii, 315.
- Austrian I*, marries the empress Ariadne, vii, 6. His war with Theodoris, the Ostrogoth king of Italy, 24. His economy celebrated, 161. His long wall from the Propontis to the Euxine, 129. Is humbled by the catholic clergy, viii, 316.
- Austrian II*, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 24. His preparations of defence against the Saracens, x, 8.
- Asathian*, St., his brief history and martyrdom, vii, 225, note.
- Asatho*, the city of, on the banks of the Euphrates, described, iv, 164.
- Asdania*, derivation of the name of that province, ix, 457, note.
- Andronicus*, president of Libya, excommunicated by Syriacus bishop of Ptolemais, iii, 292, 300.
- Andronicus Camerarius*, his character, and first adventures, ix, 92. Seizes the empire of Constantinople, 104. His unhappy fate, 107.
- Andronicus* the elder, emperor of Constantinople, his superstition, xi, 325. His war with his grandson, and abdication, 266.

- Andronicus* the younger, emperor of Constantinople, his licentious character, xi, 363. His civil war against his grandfather, 365. His reign, 369. Is vanquished and wounded by Sultan Orchan, 190. His private application to Pope Benedict of Rome, xii, 66.
- Angora*, battle of, between Tamerlane and Bajazet, xii, 66.
- Anianus*, bishop of Orleans, his pious anxiety for the relief of that city, when besieged by Attila the Hun, vi, 108.
- Anician* family at Rome, brief history of, v, 259.
- Anne Comnena*, character of her history of her father, Alexius I, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 83. Her conspiracy against her brother John, 86.
- Anthemius*, emperor of the West, his descent and investiture by Leo the Great, vi, 193. His election confirmed at Rome, 194. Is killed in the sack of Rome by Ricimer, 217, 218.
- Anthemius*, prefect of the East, character of his administration, in the minority of the emperor Theodosius the younger, v, 414, 415.
- Anthemius* the architect, instances of his great knowledge in mechanics, vii, 114. Forms the design of the church of St. Sophia at Constantinople, 117.
- Anthony*, St., father of the Egyptian monks, his history, vi, 241.
- Antropomorphites*, among the early Christians, personifiers of the Deity, viii, 269.
- Antioch*, taken and destroyed by Sapor King of Persia, i, 428. Flourishing state of the Christian church there, in the reign of Theodosius, ii, 361.
- history of the body of St. Babylas, bishop of, iv, 192. The cathedral of, shut up, and its wealth confiscated, by the emperor Julian, 129. Licentious manners of the citizens, 144. Popular discontents during the residence of Julian there, 146.
- addition there, against the emperor Theodosius, v, 59. The city pardoned, 64.
- is taken, and ruined, by Chosroes king of Persia, vii, 313. Great destruction there by an earthquake, 417. Is again seized by Chosroes II, xii, 220.
- is reduced by the Saracens, and ruined, iv, 417. Is recovered by the Greeks, v, 90.
- besieged and taken by the first crusaders, xi, 64.
- Antonia*, the wife of Belisarius, her character, vii, 164. Examines and convicts Pope Sylvester of treachery, 234. Her activity during the siege of Rome, 241. Her secret history, 261. Finds a convent for her retreat, 406.
- Antoninus*, a Roman refugee at the court of Sapor King of Persia, stimulates him to an invasion of the Roman provinces, iii, 203.
- Antoninus Pius*, his character, and that of Hadrian, conquered, i, 12. Is adopted by Hadrian, 122.
- Antoninus Marcus*, his defensive wars, i, 18. Is adopted by Pius at the instance of Hadrian, 123. His character, 125. His war against the united Germans, 301. Suspicious story of his edict in favour of the Christians, ii, 445.
- Apur*, Arrius, praetorian prefect, and father-in-law to the emperor

- under the walls of that city, 235. Accepts a ransom, and ends the siege, 295. His negotiation with the emperor Honorius, 297. His second siege of Rome, 303. Places Aspar on the imperial throne, 305. Degrades him, 309. Seizes the city of Rome, 311. His sack of Rome compared with that of the emperor Charles V, 323. Retires from Rome, and returns to Italy, 325. His death and burial, 329.
- Alaric II*, king of the Goths, his overthrow by Charles king of the Franks, vi, 331.
- Albino*, the son of Marozia, his revolt, and government of Rome, ii, 201.
- Albigens* of France, persecution of, x, 187.
- Alboin*, king of the Lombards, his history, viii, 117. His alliance with the Avars against the Gepidae, 119, 120. Reduces the Gepidae, 121. He undermines the compact of Italy, 122. Overruns what is now called Lombardy, 125. Assumes the regal title there, 127, 128. Takes Pavia, and makes it his capital city, 128, 129. Is murdered at the instigation of his queen Rosamond, 129.
- Alchery*, the books of, in Egypt, destroyed by Diocletian, ii, 137.
- Alamanni*, the origin and warlike spirit of, i, 417. Are driven out of Italy by the senate and people, 118. Invade the empire under Aurelian, ii, 21. Are totally united, 24. Gaul delivered from their depredations by Constantine Chlorus, 131.
- invade and establish themselves in Gaul, iii, 214. Are defeated at Strasbourg by Julian, 221. Are reduced by Julian in his expedition beyond the Rhine, 226. Invade Gaul under the emperor Valentinian, iv, 277. Are reduced by Jovinus, 279. And chastised by Valentinian, 282.
- are subdued by Clovis king of the Franks, vi, 316.
- Alippo*, siege and capture of, by the Saracens, ii, 415. Is recovered by the Greeks, x, 30. Is taken and sacked by Tamerlane, xii, 21.
- Alexander III*, pope, establishes the papal election in the college of cardinals, xii, 500.
- Alexander*, archbishop of Alexandria, excommunicates Arius for his heresy, iii, 528.
- Alexander Severus*, is declared Cæsar by the emperor Elagabalus, i, 218. Is raised to the throne, 240. Examination into his pretended victory over Antaxarus, 277. Shews a regard for the Christian religion, ii, 460.
- Alexandria*, a general massacre there, by order of the emperor Caracalla, i, 219. The city described, 452. Is rained by intestine intestine commotions, 453. By famine and pestilence, 456. Is besieged and taken by Diocletian, ii, 134. The Christian theology reduced to a systematical form in the school of, 363. Number of martyrs who suffered there in the persecution by Decius, 428.
- the theological system of Plato taught in the school of, and received by the Jews there, ii, 316. Questions concerning the

- of the Trinity, agitated in the philosophical and Christian schools of, 321, 327. History of the archbishop St. Athanasius, 325. Outrages attending his expulsion and the establishment of George of Cappadocia, 330. The city distracted by civil war, 339. Disgraceful life and tragical death of George of Cappadocia, iv, 125. Restoration of Athanasius, 151. Athens, plundered by Julian, 132. Suffers greatly by an earthquake, 202.
- Alexandria*, history of the temple of Serapis there, v, 108. This temple, and the famous library, destroyed by Bishop Theophilus, 111.
- is taken by Amron the Saracen, ix, 435. The famous library destroyed, 439.
- Alexius Angelus*, his usurpation of the Greek empire, and character, xi, 185. Flies before the crusaders, 213.
- Alexius I. Comnenus*, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 83. New tales of dignity invented by him, 121. Battle of Dyrraco, 294. Solicits the aid of the emperor Henry III, 300.
- solicits the aid of the Christian princes against the Turks, xi, 6. His suspicious policy on the arrival of the crusaders, 45, 46. Exact homage from them, 48. Profits by the success of the crusaders, 101, 102.
- Alexius II. Comnenus*, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 92.
- Alexius Strategopulus*, the Greek general, retakes Constantinople from the Latins, xi, 284.
- Alman*, the son of Isaac Angeles, his escape from his uncle, who had deposed his father, xi, 156. His treaty with the crusaders for his restoration, 202. Restoration of his father, 217. His death, 225.
- Alfred* sends an embassy to the shrine of St. Thomas in India, viii, 345.
- Algebra*, by whom invented, x, 47.
- Ali* joins Mahomet in his prophetic mission, ix, 284. His triumphs, 304. His character, 329. Is chosen caliph of the Saracens, 333. Devotion paid at his tomb, 341. His posterity, 342.
- Aliphan* defends Cambr, for his brother Tissa, king of the Goths, vii, 390. Is reduced, 392.
- Alisius* murders Caramin, and usurps his station, ii, 127.
- Alp Arslan*, sultan of the Turks, his reign, x, 252.
- Alpinus*, governor of Britain, is commissioned by the emperor Julian to rebuild the temple of Jerusalem, iv, 105.
- Amala*, king of the Goths, his high credit among them, i, 394.
- Amalasatha*, queen of Italy, her history and character, vii, 200. Her death, 210.
- Amalphi*, description of the city, and its commerce, x, 279.
- Amos*, improbability of any society of, x, 40, note.
- Ambition*, reflections on the violence, and various operations of this passion, ix, 109.
- Amorion*, St. composes a treatise on the Trinity, for the use of the emperor Gratian, v, 4, note. His birth, and promotion to the

- Abu Tahir*, the Carmathian, pillages Mecca, x, 77.
- Abulfeda*, his account of the splendour of the caliph Mostader, x, 87.
- Abulpharagius*, promote of the eastern Jacobites, same account of, viii, 353. His encomium on wisdom and learning, x, 42.
- Abundantius*, general of the East, and patron of the eunuch Eutropius, is disgraced and exiled by him, v, 351.
- Abyla*, the fair of, plundered by the Saracens, ix, 402.
- Abyssinia*, the inhabitants of, described, vii, 340. Their alliance with the emperor Justinian, 343. Ecclesiastical history of, viii, 367.
- Acacius*, bishop of Amida, an uncommon instance of episcopal benevolence, x, 427.
- Accha*, its extent, i, 38.
- Acra*, the memorable siege of, by the crusaders, xi, 142. Final loss of, 166.
- Adonias*, institutor of Justinian respecting, viii, 32.
- Adrian*, a review of Roman affairs after the battle of, i, 95.
- Adrianus*, the only martyr of distinction during the persecution under Diocletian, ii, 480.
- Adolphus*, the brother of Alaric, brings him a reinforcement of troops, v, 396. Is made count of the domestics to the new emperor Attalus, 395. Succeeds his brother as king of the Goths, and concludes a peace with Honorius, 330.
- Adoption*, the two kinds of, under the Greek empire, xi, 49, note.
- Adoration* of the Roman emperor, custom of, and derivation of the term, x, 124.
- Adras*, the Genoese governor of Thracia, conveys Asparuth II from Asia to Europe, xii, 32.
- Adrian I*, Pope, his alliance with Charlemagne against the Lombards, ix, 150. His reception of Charlemagne at Rome, 154, 155. Averts the fictitious donation of Constantine the Great, 159.
- Adultery*, distinctions of, and how punished by Augustus, viii, 90. By the Christian emperors, 102.
- Ælia Capitolina* fortified on Mount Sion, by Hadrian, ii, 279.
- Ælius Petrus*, his Tripartite, the oldest work of Roman jurisprudence, viii, 25.
- Æmilianus*, governor of Pannonia and Moesia, routs the barbarous invaders of the empire, and is declared emperor by his troops, i, 108.
- Æneas of Gaza*, his attestation of the miraculous gift of speech to the catholic confessors of Tipasa, whose tongues had been cut out, vi, 294.
- Æneas Silvius*, his account of the impracticability of an European crusade against the Turks, xii, 353. His epigram on the destruction of ancient buildings in Rome, 413, note.
- Æra* of the world, remarkable epochs in, pointed out, vii, 151. — Gelabzan of the Turks, when settled, x, 367.
- Arrial* tribute, in the eastern empire, what, vii, 108.

- Chloris*, surrenders the Atheists, his character and adventures, iii, 376, 378, note.
- the Roman general under Valentinian III, his character, vi, 9. His treacherous scheme to ruin Count Boniface, 11. Is forced to retire into Pannonia, 20. His invitation of the Huns into the empire, 39. Seizes the administration of the western empire, 49. His character, as given by Menapius a contemporary historian, 50. Employs the Huns and Alani in the defence of Gaul, 52. Concludes a peace with Theodoric, 97. Raises the siege of Orleans, 110. Battle of Chalons, 112. His prudence on the invasion of Italy by Attila, 129. Is murdered by Valentinian, 159.
- Africa*, its situation and revolutions, i, 41. Great revenue raised from by the Romans, 258. Progress of Christianity there, ii, 366.
- is distracted with religious discord in the time of Constantine the Great, iii, 309. Character and revolt of the Circumcellions, 398. Oppressions of, under the government of Count Romanus, iv, 301. General state of Africa, 308.
- revolt of Count Boniface there, vi, 11. Arrival of Genseric king of the Vandals, 14. Persecution of the Donatians, 16. Devastations of, by the Vandals, 20. Carthage surprised by Genseric, 26. Persecution of the Catholics, 280.
- expedition of Belisarius to, vii, 188. Is recovered by the Romans, 186. The government of, settled by Justinian, 187. Revolt of the troops there, under Stozza, 349. Devastation of the war, 353.
- invasion of, by the Saracens, ix, 449. Conquest of, by Akbah, 455. Decline and extinction of Christianity there, 495. Revolt and independence of the Saracens there, x, 79.
- Aglabites*, the Saracen dynasty of, x, 79.
- Aglar*, a Roman lady, patronises St. Boniface, ii, 482.
- Agriкола*, review of his conduct in Britain, i, 7.
- Agriculture*, great improvement of, in the western countries of the Roman empire, i, 84. State of, in the eastern empire, under Justinian, iv, 79.
- Ajan*, the sepulchre of, how distinguished, iii, 11.
- Alamudin*, battle of, between the Saracens and the Greeks, ix, 368.
- Alahab*, the Saracen, his exploits in Africa, ix, 455.
- Alani*, occasion of these people invading Asia, ii, 68. Conquest of, by the Huns, iv, 371. Join the Goths who had emigrated into Thence, 400. See Goths and Fandels.
- Alaric*, the Goth, learns the art of war under Theodosius the Great, v, 80. Becomes the leader of the Gothic revolt, and ravages Greece, 178. Expels from Sicily, 186. Is appointed master-general of the eastern Illyricum, 188. His invasion of Italy, 190. Is defeated by Stilicho at Pollentia, 199. Is driven out of Italy, 203. Is, by treaty with Honorius, declared master-general of the Roman armies throughout the prefecture of Illyricum, 294. His plans and motives for marching to Rome, 252. Encamps

- Numerian, is killed by Diocletian as the presumptive murderer of that prince, ii, 103.
- Orontes*, the Persian, his embassy from Narses king of Persia to the emperor Galerius, ii, 149.
- Apocalypse*, why now admitted into the canon of the scriptures, i, 305, note.
- Apollonius*, minister of Constantinople, his confederacy against John Cantacuzene, ii, 374. His death, 380.
- Apollinarius*, bishop of Laodicea, his hypothesis of the divine incarnation of Jesus Christ, viii, 271.
- Apollinarius*, patriarch of Alexandria, hatches his plot in defence of the catholic doctrine of the incarnation, viii, 362.
- Apollonius* of Tyana, his doubtful character, ii, 37, note.
- Apollonius* of the Roman emperors, buys this custom from the Gauls, i, 111.
- Aspar* deposes the emperor of Constantinople, and usurps his place, ix, 19.
- Aspasia* is conquered by the Normans, x, 262. Is confirmed to them by papal grant, 270.
- Aquidunum*, besieged by the emperor Maximin, i, 236. Is taken and destroyed by Attila king of the Huns, vi, 124.
- Aquitaine* is settled by the Goths, under their king Wallia, v, 338. Is conquered by Clovis king of the Franks, vi, 336.
- Arabic*, its situation, soil, and climate, ix, 219. Its division into the Sandy, the Stony, and the Happ, 222. The pastoral Arabs, 223. Their horses and camels, 224, 225. Clives of, 226. Manners and customs of the Arabs, 228. Their language, 229. Their benevolence, 242. History and description of the Caliph of Almoravides, 243. Religion, 249. Life and doctrine of Mahomet, 252. Conquest of, by Mahomet, 269. Character of the caliphs, 337. Rapid conquests of, 361. Limits of their conquests, x, 1. Three caliphs established, 34. Introduction of learning among the Arabians, 41. Their progress in the sciences, 44. Their literary deficiencies, 50. Decline and fall of the caliphs, 77, 78.
- Arbaces*, a veteran under Constantine the Great, leaves his retirement to oppose the usurper Procopius, iv, 249.
- Arbogastes*, the Frank, his military promotion under Theodosius in Gaul, and conspiracy against Valentinian the younger, v, 77. Is defeated by Theodosius, and kills himself, v, 84, 85.
- Arcadius*, son of the emperor Theodosius, succeeds to the empire of the East, v, 137. His misgovernment, 373. Extent of his dominions, 374. Administration of his favourite eunuch Eutropius, 379. His cruel law against treason, 383. Signs the condemnation of Eutropius, 391. His interview with the revellers Tulligild and Grinus, 393, 394. His death, and supposed testament, 412.
- Architecture*, Roman, the general magnificence of, indicated by the existing ruins, i, 76.
- Arribasius*, his expedition to Italy, to reduce the usurper John, vi, 4

- the object of their expedition to Colchos, vii, 321.
- the mother of the emperor Zen, and wife of Zeno, her character, and conduct afterward with Anastasius, vii, 6.
- the king of the Lybians, their terrific mode of waging war, ii, 78.
- Arinthius* is appointed general of the horse by the emperor Julian on his Persian expedition, iv, 162. Distinguishes himself against the usurper Procopius, 249.
- Arminius* takes two-thirds of the lands of the Sequani in Gaul, for himself and his German followers, vi, 354.
- Arnobius*, principal minister of the house of Curus, is received into confidence by the emperor Diocletian, ii, 114.
- Arnobius*, his logic better adapted to the detection of error, than for the discovery of truth, x, 45.
- Arius* is excommunicated for heretical notions concerning the Trinity, iii, 328. Strength of his party, ibid. His opinions established in the council of Nice, 325. Account of Arian sects, 338. Council of Rimini, 343. His banishment and death, 347, 348. His suspicious death, 348.
- the Arians persecute the Catholics in Africa, vi, 280.
- Armenia* is seized by Sapor king of Persia, i, 433. Tiridates restored, ii, 159. He is again expelled by the Persians, 144. Is resigned to Tiridates by treaty between the Romans and Persians, 154.
- is rendered tributary to Persia, on the death of Tiridates, iii, 137. Character of Arsaces Tiranus, king of, and his conduct toward the emperor Julian, iv, 157, 158. Is reduced by Sapor to a Persian province, 312.
- its distractions and divisions between the Persians and the Romans, v, 428.
- history of Christianity there, viii, 257, 258.
- Armenia* of the eastern empire, state of, under the emperor Maurice, viii, 203.
- Armenia*, the provinces of, form a free government independent on the Romans, v, 363. Submits to Chosro king of the Franks, vi, 322. Settlement of Britons in, 369.
- Armenia*, defensive, is laid aside by the Romans, and adopted by the barbarians, v, 89.
- Arnold* of Brescia, his heresy and history, xii, 271.
- Arreagus*, derivation of the name of that province, i, 51, note.
- Arrian*, his visit to, and description of, Colchos, vii, 327.
- Arsaces Tiranus*, king of Armenia, his character, and dissimulation to the emperor Julian, iv, 157, 158. Withdraws his troops treacherously from the Roman service, 185. His disastrous end, 312.
- Arsenius*, patriarch of Constantinople, excommunicates the emperor Michael Palaeologus, xi, 327. Faction of the Armenians, 328.
- Artaban*, king of Parthia, is defeated and slain by Artaxerxes king of Persia, i, 318.
- Artaban*, his conspiracy against the emperor Justinian, vii, 374. Is intrusted with the conduct of the armament sent to Italy, 378.

- Sassora*, its foundation and situation, ix, 388.
Saſſa, public, of Rome, described, v, 282.
Sauve, reception of the emperor Julian there, iv, 154.
Sauve, wild, the variety of, introduced in the circus, for the public games at Rome, ii, 101.
Sauveur, M. de, character of his Histoire Critique du Manichéisme, viii, 260, note.
Seder, battle of, between Mahomet and the Koreish of Mecca, ix, 290.
Sedwents of Arabia, their mode of life, ix, 294.
Seet, remarks on the structure of their combs and cells, x, 42, note.
Selarius, his birth and military promotion, vii, 161. Is appointed by Justinian to conduct the African war, 164. Embarkation of his troops, 167. Lands in Africa, 171. Defeats Gelimor, 176. Is received into Carthage, 177. Second defeat of Gelimor, 184. Reduction of Africa, 186. Surrender of Gelimor, 191. His triumphant return to Constantinople, 194. Is declared sole consul, 195. He menaces the Ostrogoths of Italy, 205. He seizes Sicily, 212. Invades Italy, 217. Takes Naples, 220. He enters Rome, 224. He is besieged in Rome by the Goths, ibid. The siege raised, 246. Causes Constantine, one of his generals, to be killed, 247. Siege of Ravenna, 253. Takes Ravenna by stratagem, 255. Returns to Constantinople, 258. His character and behaviour, 259. Scandalous life of his wife Antonina, 261. His disgrace and submission, 267. Is sent into the East to oppose Choroas king of Persia, 315. His polite reception of the Persian ambassadors, 316. His second campaign in Italy, 360. His ineffectual attempt to raise the siege of Rome, 364. Disquades Totila from destroying Rome, 369. Recovers the city, 370. His final recall from Italy, 372. Rescues Constantinople from the Bulgarians, 404. His disgrace and death, 407.
Sengler, in feudal language, explained, vi, 357.
Servento, battle of, between Charles of Anjou, and Mainfroy the Sicilian usurper, xi, 339.
Serventium, anecdotes relating to the siege of, x, 258.
Servetus of Tudela, his account of the riches of Constantinople, x, 112.
Seres, of Aleppo, reception of the emperor Julian there, iv, 154.
Bernard, St., his character and influence in promoting the second crusade, xi, 117. His character of the Romans, xi, 270.
Berjlar, account of the law-school established there, iii, 53. Is destroyed by an earthquake, vii, 417.
Bersier, his account of the camp of Auzengarbe, i, 333, note.
Bessarion, Cardinal, his character, xii, 129.
Bessar, governor of Rome for Justinian, his rapacity during the siege of that city by Totila the Goth, vii, 362. Occasions the loss of Rome, 366.
Besabde is taken and garrisoned by Sapor king of Persia, iii, 210. Is ineffectually besieged by Constantine, 212.
Budoes, a Sarmatian prince; deposes Hormouz king of Persia, viii, 184.

- Episcopate*, the least invidious of all human distinctions, i, 271.
Episcopate, among the primitive Christians, the office of, explained, ii, 234. A promise of episcopal authority, 235. Assumed dignity of episcopate, 251.
Episcopate, as at the time of Constantine the Great, iii, 283. Mode of election, 284. Their power of ordination, 287. The ecclesiastical revenue of each diocese how divided, 294. Their civil jurisdiction, 295. Their spiritual censures, 297. Their legislative assemblies, 303.
Episcopi, rural, their rank and duties, iii, 284.
Episcopi, superstitious regard to this year by the Romans, iv, 238.
Etlyria, the cities of, plundered by the Goths, i, 420.
Flaminii, their revolt against the emperor Diocletian, ii, 134.
Florus, his literary character, xii, 123.
Florus, the learned senator of Rome, his history, vii, 43. His imprisonment and death, 48.
Robert, the son of Robert Guiscard, his character and military exploits, x, 295; xi, 25. His route to Constantinople on the crusade, 43. His surprising reception by the emperor Alexius Comnenus, 49. Takes Antioch, and obtains the principality of it, 68. His subsequent transactions and death, 103.
Boniface, St., his History, ii, 483.
Boniface, Count, the Roman general under Valentinian III, his character, vi, 9. Is betrayed into a revolt by Ætius, 11. His repentance, 18. Is besieged in Hippo Regius by Genseric king of the Vandals, 21. Returns to Italy, and is killed by Ætius, 24.
Boniface VIII, Pope, his violent contest with Philip the Fair, king of France, and his character, vii, 306. Initiates the Jubilee, 310.
Boniface, marquis of Montberret, is chosen general of the fourth crusade to the Holy Land, xi, 198. Is made king of Macedonia, 249. Is killed by the Bulgarians, 264.
Bosphorus, revolutions of that kingdom, i, 422. Is seized by the Goths, 423. The strait of, described, ii, 4.
Bura, siege of, by the Samcenis, ix, 283.
Bohemia, the imperial general in Thessalonica, murdered in a edition, v, 65.
Bonifacius, Marshal, defends Constantinople against Belasit, xi, 458.
Baulgne, the port of, recovered from Caracalla, by Constantius Chlorus, ii, 157.
Borvidis, the Persian dynasty of, x, 83.
Brancaleone, senator of Rome, his character, vii, 286.
Bretagne, the province of, in France, settled by Britons, vi, 389, not.
Britain, reflections on the conquests of, by the Romans, i, 3. Description of, 33. Colonies planted in, 59, not. A colony of Vandals settled there by Probus, ii, 89. Revolt of Caracalla, 123.
 — how first peopled, iv, 291. Invasions of, by the Scots and Picts, 295. Is restored to peace by Theodosius, 298.
 — revolt of Maximus there, v, 8. Revolt of the troops there against Honorius, 228. Is abandoned by the Romans, 263. State of until the arrival of the Saxons, 264. Descent of the Saxons on, vi,

- dignity, 96. Division of the provinces between him and the senate, 102. Is allowed his military command and guards in the city of Rome, 103. Obtains the consular and tribunitial offices for life, 104. His character and policy, 114. Adopts Theodoric, 119. Formed an accurate register of the revenues and expenses of the empire, 257. Taxes instituted by him, 260. His naval establishments at Ravenna, v, 208.
Agathias and Ceter, these titles explained and discriminated, i, 113.
Agathias, his character and embassy from Valentinian III to Attila king of the Huns, vi, 120.
Agostus, the holy see here transferred from Rome to that city, xii, 307. Return of Pope Urban V to Rome, 365.
Aistur, his embassy from Attila to Theodoric, king of the Visigoths, vi, 110. Assumes the empire, 157. His deposition and death, 160, 167.
Amalas, emperor, his birth and services, ii, 15. His expedition against Palmyra, 37. His triumph, 45. His cruelty, and death, 54, 55.
Amurath, account of his immense camp, i, 333, note.
Amulius is invested with the purple on the Upper Danube, ii, 2.
Amulius, the tutor of the emperor Gratian, his promotions, v, 3, note.
Autharis, king of the Lombards in Italy, his wars with the Franks, viii, 144. His adventurous gallantry, 153.
Auxis, the city of, stormed and plundered by the legions in Gaul, ii, 32.
Auvergne, province and city of, in Gaul, revolutions of, vi, 362.
Avares, barbarians, fatal consequences of their admission into the Roman armies, iii, 141.
Aziz, a Turkish slave, his generous friendship to the prince Anse Comnena, ix, 87. And to Manuel Comnena, 58.
Azimutian, the citizens of, defend their privileges against Peter, brother of the eastern emperor Maurice, viii, 201, 202.
Azinas, remarkable spirit shown by the citizens of, against Attila and his Huns, vi, 63.

B

- Baulbe*, description of the ruins of, ix, 404.
Babylas, St., bishop of Antioch, his posthumous history, ix, 121.
Bagauda, in Gaul, revolt of, its occasion, and suppression by Maximian, ii, 120.
Bagdad becomes the royal residence of the Abbassides, i, 35. Derivation of the name, 36, note. The fallen state of the caliphs of, 83. The city of, stormed and sacked by the Mongols, xi, 418.
Babram, the Persian general, his character and exploits, viii, 181. Is provoked to rebellion, 183. Dethrones Chosroes, 188. His usurpation and death, 190.
Basar, chagan of the Avars, his pride, policy, and power, viii, 194. His perfidious seizure of Siminum and Singidunum, 197. His conquests, 199. His treacherous attempt to seize the emperor He-

- 238. Invests Constantinople in conjunction with the Persians, 216. Metres, 246.
- Constantine, emperor of the Turks, his reign, ci, 321. His correspondence with Macrane, xii, 17. Is defeated and captured by Tamerlane, 28. Inquiry into the story of the iron cage, 30. His sons, 17.
- Balthazar elected joint emperor with Maximus, by the senate, on the death of the two Gordians, i, 291.
- Baldwin, count of Flanders, engages in the fourth crusade, xi, 190. Is chosen emperor of Constantinople, 246. Is taken prisoner by Calo John, king of the Bulgarians, 260. His death, 262.
- Baldwin II, emperor of Constantinople, xi, 275. His distresses and expedients, 276. His expulsion from that city, 287.
- Baldwin, brother of Godfrey of Bouillon, accompanies him on the first crusade, xi, 31. Founds the principality of Edessa, 61.
- Baltic Sea, progressive subsidence of the water of, i, 346, note. How the Romans acquired a knowledge of the naval powers of, iv, 288, note.
- Baptism, theory and practice of, among the primitive Christians, iii, 272.
- Barbary, the name of that country, whence derived, ix, 463, note. The Moors of, converted to the Mahometan faith, 363.
- Barbaris, general of infantry in Gaul under Julian, his misconduct, iii, 221.
- Barcochabas, his rebellion against the emperor Hadrian, ii, 337.
- Bards, Celtic, their power of exciting a martial enthusiasm in the people, i, 374.
- Bards, British, their peculiar office and duties, xi, 366.
- Barbaras, Caesar, one of the restorers of learning, x, 457.
- Bari is taken from the Saracens by the joint efforts of the Latin and Greek empires, x, 248.
- Barlaam, a Calabrian monk, his disputes with the Greek theologians about the light of mount Thabor, xi, 383. His embassy to Rome, from Andronicus the younger, xii, 63. His literary character, 120.
- Basil I, the Macedonian, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 46. Reduces the Paulicians, x, 181.
- Basil II, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 67. His great wealth, x, 243. His inhuman treatment of the Bulgarians, 262.
- Basel, archbishop of Caesarea, no evidence of his having been persecuted by the emperor Valens, iv, 269. Insults his friend Gregory Nazianzen, under the appearance of promotion, v, 19. The father of the monks of Pontus, vi, 244, 245.
- Basilius, brother of the empress Verina, is intrusted with the command of the armament sent against the Vandals in Africa, vi, 201. His fleet destroyed by Genseric, 203. His promotion to the empire, and death, vii, 3.
- Basilius, high priest of the sun, his parentage, i, 323. Is proclaimed emperor at Ktesa, 322. See Elagabalus.
- Basilius, brother-in-law to Constantine, revolts against him, ii, 244.

- Artabanus*, king of Armenia, is deposed by the Persians at the instigation of his own subjects, v, 431.
- Armenians*, his revolt against the Greek emperor Constantine V, at Constantinople, ix, 128.
- Armenians* restores the Persian monarchy, i, 318. Prohibits every worship but that of Zoroaster, 328. His war with the Romans, 337. His character and maxims, 341.
- Armenius*, duke of Egypt under Constantine, is condemned to death under Julian, for cruelty and corruption, iv, 49.
- Armenius*, king of the Britons, his history obscured by monkish fictions, vi, 300.
- Arvandus*, pretorian prefect of Gaul, his trial and condemnation by the Roman senate, vi, 208.
- Arzalar*, battle of, between Godfrey king of Jerusalem and the sultan of Egypt, xi, 87.
- Asarius*, in ecclesiastical history, account of, vi, 239.
- Asclepiodotus* seizes and kills the British usurper Allectus, ii, 198.
- Asia*, summary view of the revolutions in that quarter of the world, i, 316.
- Asia Minor* described, i, 38. Amount of its tribute to Rome, 257. It conquered by the Turks, x, 370.
- Ascalon*, the nature of this office among the ancient pagans, ii, 354, note.
- Aspar* is commissioned by Theodasius the younger to conduct Valentinian III to Italy, vi, 4. Places his steward Leo on the throne of the eastern empire, 191. He and his sons murdered by Leo, vii, 4.
- Assamir*, the principality of, destroyed by the Moguls, xi, 417.
- Assemblies* of the people abolished under the Roman emperors, i, 108. The nature of, among the ancient Germans, 362.
- Assyria*, the province of, described, iv, 166. Is invaded by the emperor Julian, 169. His retreat, 165.
- Astero*, her image brought from Carthage to Rome, as a spouse for Elagabalus, i, 235.
- Ataulphus*, king of the Lombards, takes the city of Ravenna, and attacks Rome, ix, 148. Is repelled by Pepin king of France, 148.
- Astronomy*, why cultivated by the Arabian astronomers, x, 46.
- Atabarian*, the son of Amalaswintha queen of Italy, his education and character, vii, 508.
- Atanaric* the Gothic chief, his war against the emperor Valens, iv, 328. His alliance with Theodasius, his death and funeral, 432.
- Athanasius*, St., confesses his understanding bewildered by meditating on the divinity of the Logos, iii, 322. General view of his opinions, 335. Is banished, 349. His character and adventures, 366; iv, 131, 228, 267. Was not the author of the famous creed under his name, vi, 291, note.
- Athanasius*, patriarch of Constantinople, his conflicts with the Greek emperor Ademianus the elder, xi, 359.
- Atreus*, daughter of the philosopher Lucretius. See Eudoria.

- Atene*, the libraries in that city, why said to have been spared by the Goths, i, 434. Naval strength of the republic of, during its prosperity, ii, 237, note.
- is laid under contribution by Alaric the Goth, v, 180.
- review of the philosophical history of, vii, 143. The schools of, silenced by the emperor Justinian, 150.
- revolutions of, after the crusades, and its present state, xi, 352.
- Attes*, minute, beatific visions of the monks of, xi, 387.
- Atlantic Ocean*, derivation of its name, i, 42.
- Atacotti*, a Caladonian tribe of cannibals, account of, iv, 298.
- Atacur*, prefect of Rome, is chosen emperor by the senate, under the influence of Alaric, v, 303. Is publicly degraded, 309. His future fortune, 348.
- Atreides*, a noble youth of Auvergne, his adventures, xi, 365.
- Attila*, the Hun, vi, 40. Description of his person and character, 41. His conquests, 45. His treatment of his captives, 53. Imposes terms of peace on Theodosius the younger, 51. Oppresses Theodosius by his ambassadors, 65. Description of his royal residence, 72. His reception of the ambassadors of Theodosius, 75. His behaviour on discovering the scheme of Theodosius to get him assassinated, 82. His haughty messages to the emperors of the East and West, 88. His invasion of Gaul, 167. His oration to his troops on the approach of Aetius and Theodoric, 115. Battle of Chalons, 116. His invasion of Italy, 122. His retreat purchased by Valentinian, 131. His death, 134.
- Atys and Cybele*, the fable of, allegorized by the pen of Julian, iv, 71.
- Avars* are discomfited by the Turks, vii, 289. Their embassy to the emperor Justinian, 291. Their conquests in Poland and Germany, 292. Their embassy to Justin II, viii, 115. They join the Lombards against the Gepidae, 119. Pride, policy, and power, of their chagan Balah, 191. Their conquests, 199. Invest Constantinople, 243.
- Averroes*, his religious infidelity, how far justifiable, x, 51, note.
- Aversa*, a town near Naples, built as a settlement for the Normans, x, 259.
- Augusta*, Roman, their number and peculiar office, v, 82.
- Augustine*, his account of the miracles wrought by the body of St. Stephen, v, 129. Celebrates the piety of the Goths in the sacking of Rome, 313. Approves the persecution of the Donatists of Africa, vi, 17. His death, character, and writings, 22. History of his sects, vii, 165, note.
- Augustulus*, son of the patrician Orestes, is chosen emperor of the West, vi, 222. Is deposed by Odoacer, 224. His banishment to the Lucullan villa in Campania, 228.
- Augustus*, emperor, his moderate exercise of power, i, 2. Is imitated by his successors, 4. His naval regulations, 29. His division of Gaul, 32. His situation after the battle of Actium, 95. He reforms the senate, 97. Procures a senatorial grant of the imperium

GENERAL INDEX.

551. Establishment of the Saxon heptarchy, 354. War of the Saxons devastation of the country, 392. Manners of the inhabitants of Britons, 396. Description of by Procopius, 402.
- Britain*, conversion of the Britons by a mission from Pope Gregory the Great, viii, 167. The doctrine of the incarnation received there, 334.
- Brutus* the Trojan, his colonization of Britain, now given up by intelligent historians, iv, 291, note.
- Bugger*, M., his extraordinary burning misson, vii, 114, note.
- Bulgarians*, their character, vii, 277, 278. Their inroads on the eastern empire, 251. Invasion of, under Zabergan, 401. Repulsed by Belisarius, 403.
- the kingdom of, destroyed by Basil II, the Greek emperor, ix, 68; x, 202.
- revolt of, from the Greek empire, and submission to the pope of Rome, xi, 183. War with the Greeks under Calo-John, 237.
- Bull-fight*, in the Coliseum at Rome, described, xii, 421.
- Burgundians*, their settlement on the Elbe, and maxims of government, ix, 284. Their settlement in Gaul, v, 359. Limits of the kingdom of, under Gundobald, vi, 324. Are subdued by the Franks, 329.
- Burnet*, character of his Sacred Theory of the Earth, ii, 306, note.
- Burampooter*, source of that river, xii, 15, note.
- Bute*, in Egypt, found several places known under this name, x, 32, note.
- Buzurg*, the philosophical preceptor of Hormouz king of Persia, his high reputation, xii, 178, note.
- Byzantine historians*, list and character of, vii, 255, note.
- Byzantium*, siege of, by the emperor Severus, i, 193. Is taken by Maximian, ii, 128. Siege of, by Constantine the Great, 200. Its situation described, iii, 2. By whom founded, 4, note. See Constantinople.

C

- Caaba*, or temple of Mecca, described, ix, 245. The idols in, destroyed by Mahomet, 308.
- Cabader*, king of Persia, besieges and takes Amida, viii, 138. Seizes the ruins of Ctesiphon, 141. Vicissitudes of his reign, 209.
- Caderis*, battle of, between the Sarracens and the Persians, ix, 265.
- Cadijah*, her marriage with Mahomet, ix, 255. Is converted by him to his new religion, 282. Her death, 288. Mahomet's veneration for her memory, 328.
- Caesarius*, the peace of the church in Africa disturbed by him and his party, iii, 309.
- Cecilius*, the authority of his account of the famous vision of Constantine the Great, inquired into, iii, 200.
- Calpurnian*, senator of Carthage, his distress on the taking of that city by Genseric, vi, 81.
- Caiser*, Julius, his inducements to the conquest of Britain, i, 5. De-

- grants the senatorial dignity, ibi, note. Assumes a place among the chief artists of Rome, in his lifetime, 111. His address to suppressing a military rebellion, 252, note. His prudent application of the honorary gold presented to him, iii, 96.
- Cesar and Augustus*, these titles explained and discriminated, i, 113.
- Cassius*, of the emperor Julian, the philosophical fable of that work delineated, iv, 139.
- Cassara*, capital of Cappadocia, taken by Sapor king of Persia, i, 459. Is reduced by the Saracens, ix, 420.
- Cassia*, queen of the Moors of Africa, her policy to drive the Arabs out of the country, ix, 464.
- Cairo*, the city of, founded in the kingdom of Tunis, ix, 459.
- Caled*, descends from the idolatrous Arabs to the party of Mahomet, ix, 507. His gallant conduct at the battle of Muta, 313. His victories under the caliph Abubekur, 364. Attends the Saracen army on the Syrian expedition, 382. His valour at the siege of Damascus, 386. Distinguished himself at the battle of Airmain, 391. His cruel treatment of the refugees from Damascus, 392. Is slain in plundering the fair of Algia, 402. Commands the Saracens at the battle of Yermuk, 408. His death, 412.
- Calcedonia*, and its ancient inhabitants, described, ix, 203.
- Calchadan* war, under the emperor Severus, an account of, i, 207.
- Calpurn* of the Saracens, character of, ix, 857. Their rapid conquests, 361. Extent and power of, 500. Triple division of the offices, x, 34. They patronise learning, 41. Decline and fall of their empire, 78; xi, 417.
- Calchadan*, the punishment of a religious sedition in that city, opposed by St. Ambrose, v, 68.
- Callicrates*, of Heliopolis, assists in defending Constantinople against the Saracens, by his chymical inflammable composition, v, 14.
- Calucks*, black, recent emigration of, from the confines of Russia to those in China, iv, 370.
- Calich*, the Bulgarian chief, his war with Baldwin, the Latin emperor of the Greeks, xi, 237. Defeats, and takes him prisoner, 260. His savage character and death, 260.
- Calocerat*, a camel-driver, excites an insurrection in the island of Cyprus, iii, 119.
- Calpurnius*, the machinery of his eclogue on the accession of the emperor Carus, ii, 62.
- Calvin*, the reformer, his doctrine of the Eucharist, x, 189. Examination of his conduct to Servetus, 191.
- Camel*, of Arabia, described, ix, 226.
- Cambrils* of Languedoc, their enthusiasm compared with that of the Circumcellions of Numidia, iii, 601.
- Campania*, the province of, desolated by the ill policy of the Roman emperor, iii, 87. Description of the Lacullian villa in, vi, 229.
- Canada*, the present climate and circumstances of, compared with those of ancient Germany, i, 348.
- Candia*, enormous one of the sultan Mahomet II described, ix, 187. Ruins, 211.

- Cassar*, Russian, a description of, x, 229.
- Centaurius, John*, character of his Greek History, xi, 361. His good fortune under the younger Augustus, 372. Is driven to assume the purple, 376. His lively distinction between foreign and civil war, 379. His entry into Constantinople, and reign, 382. Abdicates, and turns monk, 386. His war with the Genoese factory at Pera, 391. Marries his daughter to a Turk, xii, 69. His negotiation with Pope Clement VI, ibid.
- Centurion's* History of the Ottoman empire, a character of, xi, 434, note.
- Capellanus*, governor of Mauritania, defeats the younger Gordian, and takes Carthage, i, 290.
- Capitoline-temple*, under the Roman emperors, an account of, vi, 89.
- Capit*, Athens, the civilian, his character, viii, 30.
- Captiv* of Rome, burning and restoration of, ii, 412.
- Cappadocia*, famous for its fine breed of horses, iii, 76.
- Cappucia*, Isle of, character of the monks there, v, 168.
- Cappus*, how limited by the luxuriana, vi, 55, 362.
- Caracalla*, son of the emperor Severus, his fixed antipathy to his brother Geta, i, 296. Succeeds to the empire jointly with him, 311. Tendency of his edict to extend the privileges of Roman citizens to all the free inhabitants of his empire, 265. His view in this transaction, 240. Doubles the tax on legacies and inheritances, 287.
- Caracorum*, the Tartar settlement of, described, xi, 425.
- Caracuzi*, Sogdian, their route to and from China, for silk, to supply the Roman empire, vii, 94.
- Caracul*, his revolt in Britain, ii, 123. Is acknowledged by Diocletian and his colleagues, 126.
- Carbas*, the Paulician, his revolt from the Greek emperor to the Saracens, x, 178.
- Cardinals*, the election of a pope vested in them, xii, 300. Institution of the conclave, 301.
- Carduene*, situation and history of that territory, ii, 151.
- Carinus*, the son of Carus, succeeds his father in the empire jointly with his brother Numerian, ii, 97.
- Carmanians*, their invasion of Syria, xi, 158.
- Carolingian* race of kings, commencement of, in France, ix, 151.
- Carmath*, the Arabian reformer, his character, x, 75. His military exploits, 76.
- Carmelites*, from whence they derive their pedigree, vi, 240, note.
- Carpasides* mountains, their situation, i, 345.
- Carthage*, the bishopric of, bought for Maximus, ii, 463, note.
- religious discord degenerated there by the factions of Cæcilian and Donatus, iii, 510.
- the temple of Venus there, converted into a Christian church, v, 107. Is surprised by Genseric king of the Vandals, vi, 25.
- the gates of, opened to Belisarius, vii, 177. Natural alterations produced by time in the situation of this city, 179, note. The walls of, repaired by Belisarius, 181. Insurrection of the Roman troops there, 348.

- Carthage* is reduced and pillaged by Hannu the Saracen, ix, 151.
 Subsequent history of, 162.
- Castellana*, an extraordinary rich silver mine worked there for the Romans, i, 258.
- Castris*, emperor, his election and character, ii, 91.
- Caspian* and Persian gates of mount Caucasus, distinguished, vii, 110.
- Cassius*, the party of, among the Roman civilians, explained, viii, 32.
- Castradorius*, his Gothic history, i, 387. His account of the infant state of the republic of Venice, vi, 127. His long and prosperous life, vii, 29.
- Castris*, George. See Scanderberg.
- Catalans*, their service and war in the Greek empire, xi, 346.
- Catholic* church, the doctrines of, how discriminated from the opinions of the Platonic school, iii, 322. The authority of, extended to the minds of mankind, 326. Faith of the western or Latin church, 342. Is disordered by factions in the cause of Athanasius, 352. The doxology, how introduced, and how perverted, 388. The revenue of, transferred to the heathen priests, by Julian, iv, 110.
- edict of Theodosius for the establishment of the catholic faith, v, 14. The progressive steps of idolatry in, 123. Persecution of the catholics in Africa, vi, 230. Pious frauds of the catholic clergy, 290.
- how bewildered by the doctrine of the incarnation, viii, 275.
- Union of the Greek and Latin churches, 334.
- schism of the Greek church, xi, 169.
- Celestine*, Pope, espouses the party of Cyril against Nestorius, and pronounces the degradation of the latter from his episcopal dignity, viii, 2-7.
- Celtic* language, driven to the mountains by the Latin, i, 60, 61, note.
- Censor*, the office of, revived under the emperor Decius, i, 400. But without effect, 402.
- Coen*, the manufacture of silk first introduced to Europe from that island, vii, 90.
- Corra*, the principal queen of Attila king of the Huns, her reception of Maximus the Roman ambassador, vi, 74.
- Cerastus*, his opinion of the twofold nature of Jesus Christ, viii, 269.
- Ceylon*, ancient names given to that island, and the imperfect knowledge of, by the Romans, iv, 142, note.
- Constantinople*, the injudicious situation of this city stigmatized by proverbial contempt, iii, 7. A tribunal created there by the emperor Julian, to try and punish the evil ministers of his predecessor Constantius, iv, 46.
- a stately church built there by Basilus, the infamous minister of the emperor Theodosius, v, 144.
- is taken by Charoes II, king of Persia, xvi, 222.

- Chalcidius*, the Greek historian, his remarks on the several nations of Europe, iii, 82.
- Chalons*, battle of, between the Romans and Attila king of the Huns, ii, 112.
- Chamædons* reduced and generously treated by Julian, iii, 287.
- Chancellor*, the original and modern application of this word compared, ii, 99, note.
- Character*, national, the distinctions of, here formed, iv, 341.
- Charots* of the Romans described, v, 259, note.
- Charlemagne* conquers the Kingdom of Lombardy, ix, 150. His reception at Rome, 151. Eludes fulfilling the promises of Pepin and himself to the Roman pontiff, 159. His coronation at Rome by the pope Leo III, 173. His eroga and character, 174. Extent of his empire, 180. His neighbours and enemies, 185. His vicissitudes, 187. His negotiations and treaty with the eastern empire, 191. State of his family and dominions in the tenth century, ii, 118.
- Charles the Fat*, emperor of the Romans, ix, 189.
- Charles* of Anjou subdues Naples and Sicily, xi, 339. The Sicilian Vespers, 344. His character as a senator of Rome, xii, 288.
- Charles IV*, emperor of Germany, his weakness and poverty, ix, 213. His public ostentation, 215. Contrast between him and Augustus, 216.
- Charles V*, emperor, parallel between him and Diocletian, ii, 171. And between the sack of Rome by him, and that by Alaric the Goth, v, 322, 323.
- Chastity*, its high esteem among the ancient Germans, i, 367. And the primitive Christians, ii, 221.
- Chaucery*, the art of, from whom derived, v, 49.
- Cherusius*, Thuringian, was slain by the emperor Tiberius, vii, 128.
- Cherinthians* assist Constantine the Great against the Goths, iii, 124. Are cruelly persecuted by the Greek emperor Justinian II, ix, 21.
- Chess*, the object of the game of, by whom invented, vii, 307.
- Childeric*, king of France, deposed under papal sanction, ix, 152.
- Children*, the exposing of, a prevailing vice of antiquity, viii, 56. Natural, according to the Roman laws, what, 67.
- China*, how distinguished in ancient history, ii, 141, note. Great numbers of children annually exposed there, 347, note.
- its situation, iv, 357. The high chronology claimed by the historians of, ibid. The great wall of, when erected, 391. Was twice conquered by the northern tribes, 394.
- the Romans supplied with silk by the caracans from, vii, 93.
- is conquered by the Moguls, xi, 414, 429. Expulsion of the Moguls, 427, 428.
- Chusby*, origin of the order of, xi, 56.
- Chlodomer*, prince of the Alemanni, taken prisoner by Julian at the battle of Strasbourg, iii, 224.
- Cleirios*, king of Armenia, assassinated by the emissaries of Sapor king of Persia, i, 435.

- Chosroes*, son of Tigranes, king of Armenia, his character, iii, 128.
- Chosroes I.*, king of Persia, protects the last surviving philosophers at Athens, in his treaty with the emperor Justinian, vii, 151. Review of his history, 156. Sells a peace to Justinian, 167. His invasion of Syria, 211. His negotiations with Justinian, 237. His prosperity, 389. Battle of Melitene, 176. His death, 177.
- Chosroes II.*, king of Persia, is raised to the throne on the deposition of his father Hormozd, viii, 186. Is reduced to implore the assistance of the emperor Maurice, 188. His restoration and policy, 190. Conquers Syria, 219. Palmyra, 221. Egypt and Asia Minor, 222. His reign and magnificence, 229. Rejects the Mahometan religion, 226. Imposes an ignominious peace on the emperor Heraclius, 229, 230. His flight, deposition, and death, 251.
- Chosroes*, the hard of, sent by the Persians to the assistance of the emperor Heraclius, viii, 246.
- Chris*, the festival of his birth, why fixed by the Romans at the winter-solstice, iv, 22, note.
- Christians*, primitive, the various sects into which they branched out, ii, 277. Ascribed the pagan idolatry to the agency of demons, 288. Believed the end of the world to be near at hand, 300. The miraculous powers ascribed to the primitive church, 301. Their faith stronger than in modern times, 314. Their unexpressed virtue and austerity, 316. Repentance, a virtue in high esteem among them, ibid. Their notions of marriage and chastity, 328. They disclaim war and government, 326. Were active, however, in the internal government of their own society, 322. Bishops, 331. Synods, 331. Metropolitans and primates, 337. Bishop of Rome, 332. Their probable proportion to the pagan subjects of the empire before the conversion of Constantine the Great, 371. Inquiry into their persecutions, 391. Why more odious to the governing powers than the Jews, 385. Their religious meetings suspected, 391. Are persecuted by Nero, as the incendiaries of Rome, 405. Instructions of the emperor Trajan to Pliny the Younger for the regulation of his conduct towards them, 419. Remained exposed to popular resentment on public occasions, 420. Legal mode of proceeding against them, 422. The ardour with which they courted martyrdom, 427. When allowed to erect places for public worship, 448. Their persecution under Diocletian and his associates, 467. An edict of toleration for them published by Galerius just before his death, 454. Some considerations necessary to be attended to in reading the sufferings of the martyrs, 491. Edict of Milan published by Constantine the Great, iii, 244. Political recommendations of the Christians usually to Constantine, 247. Theory and practice of passive obedience, 249. Their loyalty and zeal, 251. The sacrament of baptism, how administered in early times, 272. Extraordinary propagation of Christianity after it obtained the imperial sanction, 276, 277. Becomes the established religion of the Roman empire, 280. See

- nual and temporal powers, distinguished, 282. Review of the episcopal order in the church, 283. The ecclesiastical revenues of each diocese, how divided, 294. Their legislative assemblies, 303. Edict of Constantine the Great against heretics, 307. Mysterious doctrine of the Trinity, 320. The doctrines of the catholic church, how discriminated from the opinions of the Platonic school, 322. General character of the Christian sects, 403. Christian schools prohibited by the emperor Julian, iv, 111. They are removed from all offices of trust, 114. Are obliged to reinstate the pagan temples, 115. Their independent and irregular zeal against idolatry, 135.
- Christians*, distinction of, into vulgar and heretic, vi, 238. Conversion of the barbarous nations, 262.
- Christianity*, inquiry into the progress and establishment of, ii, 265. Religion and character of the Jews, 267. The Jewish religion the basis of Christianity, 274. Is offered to all mankind, ibid. The sects into which the Christians divided, 277. The theology of, reduced to a systematical form in the school of Alexandria, 269. Injudicious conduct of its early advocates, 377. Its persecutions, 381. First erection of churches, 448.
- the system of, found in Plato's doctrine of the Leyes, iii, 312.
- primary effects resulting from the conversion of the barbarous nations, vi, 275.
- its progress in the north of Europe, x, 212.
- Creyacius*, the cimbri engage Edmon to assassinate his king Attila, vi, 80. Is put to death by the emperor Pulcheria, 84. Assisted at the second council of Ephesus, viii, 300.
- Creycheir*, general of the revolted Paulicians, were-rans and pillagers Asia Minor, x, 179. His death, 181.
- Creycheir*, Manuel, the Greek envoy, his character, xii, 125. His admiration of Rome and Constantinople, 142.
- Chrysopolis*, battle of, between Constantine the Great and Licinius, ii, 262.
- Crisostom*, St., his account of the pompous luxury of the emperor Arcadius, v, 373. Protects his fugitive patron, the eunuch Eutropius, 391. History of his promotion to the archiepiscopal see of Constantinople, 398. His character and administration, 399, 400. His persecution, 404. His death, 410. His relics removed to Constantinople, ibid. His exorcism on the insensate life, vi, 247. note.
- Chryser*, Christian, the first erection of, ii, 448. Demolition of, under Dioclesian, 474. Splendour of, under Constantine the Great, iii, 297. Seven, of Asia, the fate of, vi, 437.
- Cilicia*, battle of, between Constantine the Great and Licinius, ii, 246.
- Cicero*, his view of the philosophical opinions as to the immortality of the soul, ii, 294. His exhortation on the study of the law, viii, 9. System of his republic, 27.
- Commerce* darkness, the expression of, whence derived, v, 271. note.

- Circumcellions* of Africa, Donatist schismatics, history of their revolts, iii, 288. Their religious suicides, 401. Persecution of, by the emperor Honorius, vi, 146.
- Circumcision* of both sexes, a physical custom in Æthiopia, unconnected with religion, viii, 373.
- Cicero*, Roman, the four factions in, described, vii, 76. Constantinople, and the eastern empire, distracted by these factions, 77.
- Cities* in the Roman empire enumerated, i, 77.
- commercial of Italy, rise and government of, ix, 205, 206.
- Citizens* of Rome, motive of Cæcilius for extending the privileges of, to all the free inhabitants of the empire, i, 255, 267. Political tendency of this grant, 269.
- Cy*, the birth of a new one, how celebrated by the Romans, iii, 15, note.
- Cyrians* of Rome, origin of the profession, and the three periods in the history of, viii, 23.
- Civilis*, the Batavian, his successful revolt against the Romans, i, 377.
- Claudian* the poet, and panegyrist of Stilicho, his works supply the deficiencies of history, v, 151. Celebrates the murder of Rufinus, 159. His death and character, 247. His character of the monarch Eutropius, 379.
- Claudius*, emperor, chosen by the prætorian guards, without the concurrence of the senate, i, 115.
- Claudius*, emperor, successor to Galba, his character and elevation to the throne, ii, 4.
- Cleander*, minister of the emperor Commodus, his history, i, 145.
- Clement*, Flavius, and his wife Domitilla, why distinguished as Christian martyrs, ii, 415.
- Clement III*, Pope, and the emperor Henry III, mutually confirm each other's sovereign characters, v, 302.
- Clement V*, Pope, transfers the holy see from Rome to Avignon, vii, 306.
- Clergy*, when first distinguished from the laity, ii, 340; iii, 392.
- the ranks and numbers of, have multiplied, iii, 250. Their property, ibid. Their offences only cognizable by their own order, 256. Valentinian's edict to restrain the avarice of, iv, 270.
- Cleodius*, the first of the Merovingian race of kings of the Franks in Gaul, his reign, vi, 103.
- Clothes* Albinus, governor of Britain, his steady fidelity during the revolutions at Rome, i, 176. Declares himself against Julianus, 177.
- Clothilda*, niece of the king of Burgundy, is married to Clovis king of the Franks, and converts her pagan husband, vi, 318. Exhorts her husband to the Gothic war, 321.
- Clovis*, king of the Franks, his descent and reign, vi, 310.
- Cloves*, his account of the objects of adulation among the ancient Germans, i, 370, note.
- Cochineal*, importance of the discovery of, in the art of dying, vii, 60, note.

- Code of Justinian*, how formed, viii, 37. New edition of, 16.
- Colchids*, how far admitted by the Roman law respecting testament, viii, 30.
- Colchids*, in monkish history, described, vi, 262.
- Colours*, how regulated by the Roman emperors, xii, 241.
- Colchos*, the modern Mingrelia, described, vii, 319. Manners of the natives, 323. Hermit of, from the Romans to the Persians, and repugnance, 330. Colchian war, its consequences, 334.
- Colosseum* of the emperor Titus, observations on, xii, 418. Exhibition of a bull fight in, 421.
- Colymbicus* heretics, an account of, ix, 264.
- Comarini*, Roman, how planted, i, 53.
- Comens*, history of the Roman family of, xii, 316.
- Comenai*, of Rhodes, whose account of, ix, 427.
- Comenai* of Hercules, their situation, i, 49.
- Comenai*, the rich temple of, suppressed, and the revenues confiscated, by the emperors of the East, iii, 76.
- Comenai*, judicial, origin of, in the Sclavic laws, vi, 251. The laws of, according to the voice of Jerusalem, xi, 96. Apology for the practice of, 319, note.
- Comenai*, account of those which appeared in the reign of Justinian, viii, 41.
- Comenai*, his disgraceful warfare against the Avars, viii, 202.
- Comenai*, emperor, his education, character, and reign, i, 137.
- Comenai*, origin of the family of, at the throne of Constantinople, ix, 74. Its extinction, xii, 349.
- Comenai*, immaculate, of the Virgin Mary, the doctrine of, from whence derived, ix, 101.
- Comenai*, according to the Roman civil law, explained, viii, 67.
- Comenai*, general ideas of the primitive Christians concerning, ii, 303.
- Comenai*, the study of, not so justifiable as the desire of spoil, ix, 297. Is rather achieved by art, than personal valour, xi, 42.
- Comenai III*, emperor, engages in the second crusade, xi, 103. His disastrous expedition, 113.
- Comenai* of Montemar, defends Tyre against Saladin, xi, 140. Is executed, 146.
- Comenai*, Henry of, ix, 267.
- Comenai*, the third son of Constantine the Great, is sent to govern the western provinces of the empire, iii, 118. Division of the empire among him and his brothers, on the death of their father, 133. Is invaded by his brother Constantine, 146. Is killed, on the usurpation of Maximian, 149. Exposed the cause of Athanasius against his brother Constantine, 204.
- Comenai II*, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 111.
- Comenai*, princess, grand-daughter of Constantine the Great, is married by her mother to the camp of the usurper Procopius, ix, 247. Narrowly escapes falling into the hands of the Quadi, 329. Marries the emperor Gratian, 353.
- Comenai*, daughter of Constantine the Great, and widow of Hunc-Attiliana, places the diadem on the head of the general Verminio, vi, 150. Is married to Gallus, 172. Her character, 173. Dies, 174.

Constantia, widow of the eastern emperor Maurice, the cruel fate of, and her daughters, viii, 212.

Constantine the Great, the several opinions as to the place of his birth, ii, 100. His history, 101. He is saluted emperor by the British legions on the death of his father, 104. Marries Fausta, the daughter of Maximian, 203. Puts Maximian to death, 212. General review of his administration in Gaul, 213. Undertakes to deliver Rome from the tyranny of Maxentius, 230. Defeats Maxentius, and enters Rome, 231. His alliance with Licinius, 237. Defeats Licinius, 245, 248. Peace concluded with Licinius, 249. His laws, 250. Chastises the Goths, 254. Second civil war with Licinius, 255.

— Motives which induced him to make Byzantium the capital of his empire, iii, 3. Declares his determination to spring from divine command, 18. Despoils other cities of their ornaments to decorate his new capital, 19. Ceremony of dedicating his new city, 29. Form of civil and military administration established there, 30. Separates the civil from the military administration, 37. Corrupted military discipline, 59. His character, 69. Account of his family, 104. His jealousy of his son Crispus, 108. Mysterious deaths of Crispus and Licinius, 111. His repentance and acts of atonement performed, 112. His son and nephews, 113. Sends them to superintend the several provinces of the empire, 118. Attacks the Sarmatians, and overcomes the Goths, 123. Reduces the Goths to peace, 125. His death, 127. Attempts to ascertain the date of his conversion to Christianity, 209. His pagan superstition, 242. Protects the Christians in Gaul, 249. Publishes the edict of Milan, 244. Motives which recommended the Christians to his favour, 247. Exalts his subjects to embrace the Christian profession, 252. His famous standard the Labrum described, 257. His celebrated vision previous to his battle with Maxentius, 260. Story of the miraculous cross in the air, 263. His conversion accounted for, from natural and probable causes, 267. His theological discourses, 269. His devotions and privileges, 271. The delay of his baptism accounted for, 272. Is commemorated as a saint by the Greeks, 276. His edict against heretics, 307. Favourable to the cause of Basilian against Dionysius, 311. His amiable letter to the Bishop of Alexandria, 343. How prevailed on to ratify the Nicene creed, 347. His policy in religion, 349. Granted a toleration to his pagan subjects, 405. His reform of pagan abuses, ibid. Was associated with the brethren deities after his death, by a decree of the senate, 402. His discovery of the holy sepulchre, ix, 100.

— publication of his fictitious donation to the Bishop of Rome, ix, 159. Fabulous interdicts of marriage with异教徒, ascribed to him, x, 129.

Constantine II, the son of Constantine the Great, is sent to govern

- over Gaul, vi, 118. Division of the empire among him and his brothers, on the death of their father, 123. Invades his brother Constantia, and is killed, 147.
- Constantine III*, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 10.
- Constantine IV*, Pogonates, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 15.
- Constantine V*, Copronymus, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 29. Fate of his five sons, 30. Result of Artavazdes, and troubles on account of image worship, 129, 130. Abolishes the monkish order, 130.
- Constantine VI*, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 31.
- Constantine VII*, Porphyrogennetus, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 67. His cautions against discovering the secret of the Greek fire, x, 17. Account of his marks, 94. Their imperfections pointed out, 94. His account of the ceremonies of the Byzantine court, 127. Justifies the marriage of his son with the princess Bertha of France, 130.
- Constantine VIII*, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 59.
- Constantine IX*, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 67.
- Constantine X*, Monomachus, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 72.
- Constantine XI*, Ducas, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 77.
- Constantine Palæologus*, the last of the Greek emperors, his reign, xii, 175.
- Constantine Scythicus*, founder of the Paulicians, his death, x, 175.
- Constantine*, a private soldier in Britain, elected emperor for the sake of his name, v, 221. He conquers Gaul and Spain, 231, 342. His rebellion and death, 343.
- Constantine*, general under Belisarius in Italy, his death, vii, 247.
- Constantinople*, its situation described, with the motives which induced Constantine the Great to make this city the capital of his empire, iii, 2. Its local advantages, 12. Its extent, 15. Progress of the work, 19. Principal edifices, 20. How furnished with inhabitants, 24. Privileges granted to it, 26. Its dedication, 28. Review of the new form of civil and military administration established there, 30. It allotted to Constantine the Younger in the division of the empire, on the emperor's death, 124. Violence contests there between the rival bishops, Paul and Macedonius, 222. Bloody engagement between the Athanasians and Arians on the removal of the body of Constantine, 395. Triumphant entry of the emperor Julian, ix, 36. The senate of, allowed the same powers and honours as that at Rome, 56. Arrival of Valens, as emperor of the East, 242. Revolt of Procopius, 245.
- , continued the principal seat of the Arian heresy, during the reigns of Constantine and Valens, v, 17. Is purged from Arianism by the emperor Theodosius, 22. Council of, 26. Is enriched by the bodies of saints and martyrs, 125. Insurrection against Gallus and his Arian Goths, 405. Persecution of the archbishop, St. Chrysostom, 404. Popular tumults on his account, 406. Earthquake there, vi, 50.
- , the city and eastern empire distracted by the factions of the circus, vii, 77. Foundation of the church of St. Sophia, 116. Other churches erected there by Justinian, 122. Triumph of Belisarius over the Vandals, 104. The walls of, injured by an earthquake, 442. State of the empire under the emperor Maurice, 605. The armies and city revolt against him, 607. Deliverance of the city from the Persians and Avars, 243. Religious war about the Trisulcan, 314.

Constantinople, Prospectus of the remaining history of the eastern empire, ix, 1. Summary review of the five dynasties to the Greek empire, 103. Turbulence in the city to oppose the destruction of images, 126. Abolition of the monkish order by Constantine, 190. First siege of, by the Saracens, i, 2. Second siege by the Saracens, 8. Review of the provinces of the Greek empire in the tenth century, 59. Riches of the city of Constantinople, 112. The imperial palace of, 114. Officers of rank, 121. Military character of the Greeks, 140. The name and character of Romans, ascribed to the last, 155. Decline and revival of literature, 154. The city menaced by the Turks, 214. Account of the Varangians, 222. Naval expeditions of the Russians against the city, 228.

Origin of the separation of the Greek and Latin churches, xi, 169. Manners of the Latins, 180. Invasion of the Greek empire, and conquest of Constantinople by the crusaders, 208. The city taken, and Isaac Angelus restored, 217. Part of the city burnt by the Latins, 222. Second siege of the city by the Latins, 226. Is pillaged, 231. Account of the statues destroyed, 238. Partition of the Greek empire by the French and Venetians, 243. The Greeks rise against their Latin conquerors, 258. The city retaken by the Greeks, 284. The suburb of Galata assigned to the Genoese, 290. Hostilities between the Genoese and the emperor, 291. How the city escaped the Moguls, 428. Is besieged by the sultan Amurath II, xii, 56. Is compassed with flame, 141. Is besieged by Mehmet II, sultan of the Turks, 200. Is stormed and taken, 231. Becomes the capital of the Turkish empire, 245.

Constantine Chlorus, governor of Dalmatia, was intended to be adopted by the emperor Cereus, in the room of his vicious son Carinus, ii, 100. Is associated in Caesar by Diocletian in his administration, 118. Assumes the title of Augustus, on the abdication of Diocletian, 186. His death, 193. Granted a toleration to the Christians, 479.

Constantine, the second son of Constantine the Great, his education, iii, 116. Is sent to govern the eastern provinces of the empire, 118. Seizes Constantinople on the death of his father, 131. Conspires the death of his kinsmen, 133. Division of the empire among him and his brothers, ibid. Restores Chusroes king of Armenia, 138. Battle of Singara with Sapor king of Persia, 140. Rejects the offers of Magnentius and Vetranus, on the plea of a vision, 152. His devotion to the Illyrian troops at the interview with Vetranus, 154. Defeats Magnentius at the battle of Mursa, 160. His council governed by eunuchs, 168. Education of

- his cousin Gallus and Julian, 171. Disgrace and death of Gallus, 179. Sends for Julian to court, 186. Invests him with the title of Cæsar, 188. Visits Rome, 191. Presents an obelisk to that city, 193. The Quadii and Sarmatian wars, 196. His Persian negotiation, 200. Mismanagement of affairs in the East, 211.
Favours the Arians, 251. His religious character by Ammianus the historian, 252. His restless endeavours to establish an uniformity of Christian doctrine, 254. Athanasius driven into exile by the council of Antioch, 264. Is intimidated by his brother Constant, and invites Athanasius back again, 268. His severe treatment of those bishops who refused to concur in deposing Athanasius, 274.
His scrupulous orthodoxy, 277. His cautious conduct in expelling Athanasius from Alexandria, 278. His strenuous efforts to seize his person, 282. Athanasius writes invectives to expose his character, 287. Is constrained to restore Liberius, bishop of Rome, 291. Supports Macedonius, bishop of Constantinople, and coun-teracts his persecutions of the Catholics and Novatians, 296, 297.
His conduct towards his pagan subjects, 407. Envis the fame of Julian, iv, 3. Recals the legions from Gaul, 4. Negotiations between him and Julian, 12. His preparations to oppose Julian, 32.
His death and character, 54, 55.
- Constantine*, general, advises the British emperor Constantine when besieged in Arles, v, 343. His character and victories, 344. His marriage with Flordia, and death, vi, 2.
- Constantius*, secretary to Attila king of the Huns, his matrimonial negotiations at the court of Constantinople, vi, 63.
- Cornel*, the office of, explained, i, 105. Attention this office underwent under the emperors, and when Constantinople became the seat of empire, iii, 65. The office of, suppressed by the emperor Justinian, vii, 152. Is now apply to a commercial agent, xii, 279.
- Contract*, the Roman laws respecting, viii, 84.
- Copt* of Egypt, brief history of, viii, 390.
- Cordoba*, arriving as a Roman colony, celebrates the Isthmian games under the emperor Julian, iv, 55. The Isthmian of, fortified by the emperor Justinian, vii, 123.
- Cornwall*, reduction of, by the Saxons, vi, 388.
- Corsair* gold, nature of those offerings to the Roman emperors, iii, 95.
- Corsicus*, Matthias, king of Hungary, his character, xii, 147.
- Cosmas Indicopleustes*, account of his Christian topography, vii, 100.
Name, xii, 342, note.
- Cosmo* of Melleis, his character, xii, 136.
- Councils and synods of*
Antioch, iii, 264.
Arles, iii, 371.
Neul, xii, 82.
Constance, iii, 261.
Carthage, vi, 273, vii, 187.

Councils and Synods of

Chalcedon, v, 465; viii, 303.

Charmont, xi, 8.

Constance, xii, 86, 92, 375.

Constantinople, v, 26; viii, 377, 383; ix, 125; xi, 171.

Ephesus, viii, 288, 301.

Ferrara, xii, 103.

Florence, xii, 103.

Frankfurt, ix, 108.

Lyons, vi, 325; xi, 276, 334.

Milan, iii, 272.

Nice, vi, 382; ix, 164.

Pisa, xi, 92.

Piacenza, xi, 57.

Rimini, iii, 343.

Sardica, iii, 306.

Toledo, vi, 300, 304, 376.

Tyre, iii, 261.

Count, great difference between the ancient and modern application of this title, iii, 58. By whom first invented, ibid. Of the sacred largeness under Constantine the Great, his office, 74. Of the domestics in the eastern empire, his office, 77.

Courtesy, history of the family of, xi, 294.

Crescentius, consul of Rome, his vicissitudes, and disgraceful death, ix, 203.

Crete, the isle of, subdued by the Saracens, x, 58. Is recovered by Nicephorus Phocas, 59. Is purchased by the Venetians, xi, 249.

Crimen, how distinguished by the penal laws of the Romans, viii, 98.

Crispus, son of Constantine the Great, is declared Caesar, ii, 249. Distinguishes his valour against the Franks and Alemanni, 253. Forces the passage of the Hellespont, and defeats the fleet of Licinius, 260. His character, iii, 106. His mysterious death, 114.

Crispus, the patrician, marries the daughter of Phocas, and contributes to depose him, viii, 214. Is obliged to turn monk, 217.

Croatia, account of the Kingdom of, x, 198.

Cross, the different sentiments entertained of this instrument of punishment, by the pagans and Christian Romans, iii, 250. The famous standard of, in the army of Constantine the Great, described, 258. His vision of, 260, 263. The holy sepulchre and cross of Christ discovered, ix, 101. The cross of Christ undiminished by distribution to pilgrims, 102.

Crown of thorns, its transfer from Constantinople to Paris, xi, 278.

Crown, mural and obsequial, the distinction between, ix, 175. note.

Crusade, the first resolved on at the council of Clermont, xi, 10. Inquiry into the justice of the holy war, 12. Examination into the private motives of the crusaders, 20. Departure of the crusaders, 24. Account of the chiefs, 30. Their march to Constantin-

- ople, 41. Review of their numbers, 53. They take Nice, 53. Battle of Dorylaeum, 60. They take Antioch, 64. Their distresses, 69. Are relieved by the discovery of the holy lance, 73. Siege and conquest of Jerusalem, 81. Godfrey of Bouillon chosen king of Jerusalem, 86. The second crusade, 105. The crusaders ill treated by the Greek emperors, 109. The third crusade, 140. Siege of Acre, 142. Fourth and fifth crusades, 133. Sixth crusade, 158. Seventh crusade, 168. Recapitulation of the fourth crusade, 197. General consequences of the crusades, 208.
- Chorizan*, the city of, plundered by the Romans, i, 234. Its situation described, iv, 178. Julian declines the siege of that city, 185. Is sacked by the Saracens, ix, 368.
- Cheboi*, emperor of China, his character, xi, 426.
- Chersabala*, his office under the Greek emperors, x, 121.
- Constant*, duties of, imposed by Augustus, i, 261.
- Cycle of indictions*, the origin of, traced, and how now employed, iii, 88, note.
- Cyprian*, bishop of Carthage, his history and martyrdom, ii, 428.
- Cyprus*, the kingdom of, bestowed on the house of Lusignan, by Richard I of England, xi, 183.
- Cyrene*, the Greek colonies there finally exterminated by Chosroes II, king of Persia, viii, 232.
- Cyriader*, an obscure fugitive, is set up by Sapor the Persian monarch, as emperor of Rome, i, 487.
- Cyril*, bishop of Jerusalem, his pompous relation of a miraculous appearance of a celestial cross, iii, 351. His ambiguous character, iv, 104.
- Cyril*, patriarch of Alexandria, his life and character, viii, 276. Condemns the heresy of Nestorius, 287. Procures the decision of the council of Ephesus against Nestorius, 289. His court intrigues, 294.
- Cyrenus*, how it escaped destruction from the Goths, i, 428. Is at length ruined by them, 429. The island and city of, seized by the usurper Phocas, iv, 247.

D

- Dacia*, conquest of, by the emperor Trajan, i, 9. Its situation, 37. Is over-run by the Goths, 307. Is resigned to them by Aurelian, 3, 12.
- Dagobert*, general of the emperor Justinian, besieges Petra, vii, 331. Commands the Huns in Italy under Narces, 382.
- Dionysius*, archbishop of Pisa, installed patriarch of Jerusalem, xi, 89.
- Dalmatia* described, i, 36. Produce of a silver mine there, 259, note.
- Dalmatian*, nephew of Constantine the Great, is created Caesar, iii, 116. Is sent to govern the Gothic frontier, 118. Is cruelly destroyed by Constantius, 142.
- Damascus*, siege of, by the Saracens, ix, 385. The city reduced both by storm and by treaty, 394. Remarks on Hughes's tragedy

- of this siege, 397, note. Taken and destroyed by Tamarlane, xv, 23.
- Damasius*, bishop of Rome, edict of Valentin addressed to him, to restrain the costly avarice of the Roman clergy, iv, 271. His bloody contest with Ursinus for the episcopal dignity, 274.
- Damir*, the Arab, his gallant enterprize against the castle of Aleppo, ix, 416.
- Damietta* is taken by Louis IX of France, xi, 160.
- Damophilus*, archbishop of Constantinople, resigns his see, rather than subscribe the Nicene creed, v, 23.
- Dandolo*, Henry, doge of Venice, his character, xi, 195. Is made despot of Romania, 243.
- Daniel*, first bishop of Winchester, his instructions to St. Boniface, for the conversion of infidels, vi, 278.
- Danielis*, a Grecian nation, her presents to the emperor Basil, x, 108. Her visit to him at Constantinople, 117. Her testament, 118.
- Danubs*, course of the river, and the provinces of, described, i, 35.
- Daphne*, the sacred grove and temple of, at Antioch, described, iv, 118. Is converted to Christian purposes by Gallus, and restored to the pagans by Julian, 121, 122. The temple burned, 123.
- Dara*, the fortification of, by Justinian, described, vii, 159. The demolition of, by the Persians, prevented by peace, 305. Is taken by Charles king of Persia, xvii, 175.
- Darius*, his scheme for connecting the continents of Europe and Asia, iii, 6.
- Darkness*, preternatural, at the time of the passion, is unnoticed by the heathen philosophers and historians, ii, 374.
- Dastagard*, the Persian royal seat of, plundered by the emperor Heraclius, viii, 260.
- Dathenus*, governor of Spain, yields ready obedience to the imperial edicts against the Christians, ii, 478.
- Datus*, bishop of Milan, instigates the revolt of the Ligurians to Justinian, xv, 242, 263. Returns to Constantinople on the taking of Milan by the Huns, 280.
- Debtors*, insolvent, cruel punishment of, by the law of the twelve tables, viii, 92.
- Decretes*, review of the laws of their twelve tables, viii, 6. Three laws superseded by the perpetual edict, 16. Severity of, 90.
- Decius*, his exaltation to the empire, i, 324, 385. Was a persecutor of the Christians, 432.
- Devisions*, in the Roman empire, are severely treated by the imperial laws, iii, 81.
- Deification* of the Roman emperors, how this species of idolatry was introduced, i, 111.
- Delators*, are encouraged by the emperor Commodus, to gratify his hatred of the senate, i, 141. Are suppressed by Pertinax, 162.
- Delphic*, the sacred ornaments of the temple of, removed to Constantinople by Constantine the Great, iii, 22, note.
- Democracy*, a form of government unfavourable to freedom in a large state, i, 54.

- Dæmon*, supposed to be the authors and objects of pagan idolatry, by the primitive Christians, ii, 288.
- Demosthenes*, governor of Coesarea, his gallant defence against, and heroic escape from, Sapor king of Persia, i, 439.
- Dionysius*, bishop of Carthage, humanely receives the captives brought from Rome by Genseric king of the Vandals, vi, 154.
- Diror*, the Saceren, his character, ix, 349.
- Desiderius*, the last king of the Lombards, conquered by Charlemagne, ix, 150.
- Despot*, nature of that title in the Greek empire, x, 121.
- Despotism* originates in superstition, i, 267, note.
- Diadem* assumed by Diocletian, what, ii, 165.
- Diamonds*, the art of cutting them, unknown to the ancients, i, 262, note.
- Didius Julianus* purchases the imperial dignity at a public auction, i, 172.
- Dioceses* of the Roman empire, their number and government, iii, 49.
- Diocletian*, the manner of his military election to the empire, ii, 109. His birth and character, 112. Takes Maximian for his colleague, 115. Associates as Cæsars, Galerius and Constantius Chlorus, 118. His triumph in conjunction with Maximian, 156. Fixes his court at the city of Nicomedia, 159. Abdicates the empire, 170. Parallel between him and the emperor Charles V, 171. Passes his life in retirement at Salona, 174. His impartial behaviour towards the Christians, 458. Causes that produced the persecution of the Christians under his reign, 460.
- Dion Cassius*, the historian, screened from the fury of the soldiers, by the emperor Alexander Severus, i, 250.
- Dionysius*, patriarch of Alexandria, his outrageous behaviour at the second council of Ephesus, viii, 301. Is deposed by the council of Chalcedon, 306.
- Durand*, great khan of the Turks, his reception of the ambassadors of Justinian, vii, 295.
- Dixes*, the liberty and abuse of, by the Roman laws, viii, 60. Limitations of, 63.
- Dartes*, their peculiar tenets, iii, 319; viii, 265. Derivation of their name, iii, 320, note.
- Domine*, St. Loricatus, his fortitude in flagellation, xi, 17.
- Domitus*, when this epithet was applied to the Roman emperors, ii, 163.
- Domitian*, emperor, his treatment of his kinsmen Flavius Sabinius and Flavius Clemens, ii, 415.
- Domitian*, the oriental prefect, is sent by the emperor Constantine to reform the state of the East, then oppressed by Gallus, iii, 174. Is put to death there, 177.
- Donatus*, his contest with Cæcilian for the see of Carthage, iii, 300. History of the schism of the Donatists, 311, 395. Persecution of the Donatists by the emperor Honorius, vi, 16.
- Doryclæum*, battle of, between Sultan Soliman and the first crusades, ii, 60.

Doxology, how introduced in the church service, and how perverted, iii, 288.

Dramatic representations at Rome, a character of, v, 265.

Dreams, the popular opinion of the preternatural origin of, favourable to that of Constantine previous to his battle with Maxentius, iii, 262.

Drumodary, extraordinary speed of this animal, ii, 42, note.

Dragons of the Greek empire, described, xi, 157, 158.

Druids, their power in Gaul suppressed by the emperor Tiberius and Claudius, i, 52.

Dreux of mount Libanus, a character of, x, 350, note.

Duke, derivation of that title, and great change in the modern, from the ancient application of it, iii, 58.

Durazzo, siege of, by Robert Guiscard, x, 288. Battle of, between him and the Greek emperor Alexius, 294.

E

Earthquake, an extraordinary one over great part of the Roman empire, ix, 338. Account of those that happened in the reign of Justinian, vii, 417.

East India, the Roman commercial intercourse with that region, i, 86. Commodities of, taxed by Alexander Severus, 262.

Ethiopians, account of that sect, ii, 279.

— a confutation of their errors, supposed by the primitive fathers to be a particular object in the writings of St. John the Evangelist, iii, 318.

— their ideas of the person of Jesus Christ, viii, 261.

Ecclanastri, the book of, why not likely to be the production of King Solomon, vii, 195, note.

Ecclesiastical and civil powers, distinguished by the fathers of the Christian church, ii, 282.

Edicius, son of the emperor Avitus, his gallant conduct in Gaul, vi, 207.

Echtern of the emperor Heraclius, viii, 351.

Edda, of Iceland, the system of mythology in, i, 390.

Edessa is sent from Attila king of the Huns, as his ambassador to the emperor Theodosius the Younger, vi, 68. Engages in a proposal to assassinate Attila, 80. His son Odomer, the first barbarian king of Italy, 224.

Edessa, the purest dialect of the Syriac language spoken there, i, 335, note. The property of the Christians there, confiscated by the emperor Julian, for the disorderly conduct of the Armen, ix, 129. Revolt of the Roman troops there, viii, 261. Account of the school of, 339. History of the famous image there, ix, 318. The city and principality of, seized by Baldwin the crusader, xi, 63. Is retaken by Zenghi, 122. The towns of, 235.

Edict of Milan, published by Constantine the Great, iii, 244.

Editors of the pretors, at Rome, under the republic, their nature and tendency, viii, 11.

Educa, why that name was applied to the Roman empire by the Jews, ii, 287, note.

- Harmer*, the Sasanian dynasty of, 4, 80.
- Edward I of England*, his crusade to the Holy Land, xi, 165.
- Agadine*, his character and revolt in Gaul, vi, 185. His son Syagrius, 212.
- Egypt*, general description of, i, 40. The superstitions of, with difficulty tolerated at Rome, 32. Amount of its revenues, 257. Public works executed there by Probus, ii, 89. Conduct of Dioclesian there, 134. Progress of Christianity there, 363.
- edict of the emperor Valens, to restrain the number of recluse monks there, iv, 270.
- the worship of Serapis, how introduced there, iv, 108. His temple, and the Alexandrian library, destroyed by Bishop Theophilus, 111, 112. Origin of monkish institutions in, vi, 241.
- great supplies of wheat furnished by, for the city of Constantinople, in the time of Justinian, vii, 88. Ecclesiastical history of, viii, 360.
- reduced by the Saracens, v, 427. Capture of Alexandria, 435. Adulteration of, 448. Description of, by Attian, 445.
- the Egyptians take Jerusalem from the Turks, xi, 77. Egypt conquered by the Turks, 125. Government of the Mamelukes there, 164.
- Elagabalus* is declared emperor by the troops at Emesa, i, 229. Was the first Roman who wore garments of pure silk, vii, 92.
- Elpharaz*, inquiry into the number of, brought into the field by the ancient princes of the East, i, 337, note. With what view introduced in the circus at Rome in the first Punic war, ii, 103.
- Eleusinian mysteries*, why tolerated by the emperor Valentinian, iv, 264.
- Elmstedt*, queen of England, the political use she made of the national pulpit, ix, 731, note.
- Emigration of the ancient northern nations*, the nature and motives of, examined, i, 390.
- Emperors of Rome*, a review of their constitutions, viii, 16. Their legislative power, 18. Their Rescripts, 19.
- of Germany, their limited powers, ix, 208. Of Constantinople, their pomp and luxury, x, 113. Officers of the palace, suite, and army, 121. Adoration of the emperor, mode of, 124. Their public appearance, 131. Their despotic power, 134. Their navy, 136. They retain the name of Romans to the last, 155.
- Empire*, Roman, division of, into the East and West empires by Valentinian, iv, 242. Extinction of the western empire, vi, 234.
- Essempment*, Roman, described, i, 25.
- Euodius*, the servile flatterer of Theodoric the Ostrogoth king of Italy, is made bishop of Pavia, vii, 16, note.
- Epagathus*, leader of the numerous pretorians, who murdered their prefect Ulpian, punished by the emperor Alexander Severus, i, 250.
- Epheus*, the famous temple of Diana at, destroyed by the Goths, i, 432. Council of, ii, 288. Episcopal riots there, 291.
- Ephorus*, his legacy to his philosophical disciples at Athens, vii, 146.

- Episcopi*, despots of, on the dismemberment of the Greek empire, xi, 255.
- Equites*, master-general of the Illyrian frontier, is defeated by the Sarmatians, iv, 330.
- Erasmus*, his merit as a reformer, x, 192.
- Essenians*, their distinguishing tenets and practices, ii, 369.
- Eucharist*, a bloody subject to the first reformers, x, 159.
- Eudes*, duke of Aquitain, repels the first Saracen invasion of France, x, 20. Implores the aid of Charles Martel, 24. Recovers his dukedom, 27.
- Eudokia*, her birth, character, and marriage with the emperor Theodosius the Younger, v, 421. Her disgrace and death, 425.
- Eudoxia*, her marriage with the emperor Arcadius, iii, 148. Stimulates him to give up his favourite Eutrophius, 200. Persecutes St. Chrysostom, 405. Her death and character, 411.
- Eudoxia*, the daughter of Theodosius the Younger, is betrothed to the young emperor Valentinian III of the West, vi, 7. Her character, 140. Is married to the emperor Maximus, 142. Invites Gomeris king of the Vandals to Italy, 150.
- Eudoxas*, bishop of Constantinople, baptizes the emperor Valens, iv, 205.
- Eugenius*, the rustician, is made emperor of the West by Arlesianes the Frank, v, 78. Is defeated and killed by Theodosius, 84.
- Eugenius IV*, Pope, his contest with the council of Basil, xii, 25. Procures a cession of the Latin and Greek churches, 111, 112. Forms a league against the Turks, 154. Result of the Roman citizens against him, 178.
- Eusebius*, the orator, some account of, ii, 182, note.
- Eusebius*, the sophist, his character of monks, and of the objects of their worship, v, 123, 124.
- Eusebianus*, punishment of, by the edict of the emperor Theodosius against heretics, v, 59.
- Eusebia*, enumerated in the list of eastern commodities imported and taxed in the time of Alexander Severus, i, 262. They infect the palace of the third Gordian, 307.
- their ascendancy in the court of Constantine, iii, 166. Why they favoured the Arians, 350, note. Procure the banishment of Liberius bishop of Rome, 361.
- a conspiracy of, disappoint the schemes of Rufinus, and marry the emperor Arcadius to Eudoxia, v, 145. They distract the court of the emperor Honorius, 201. And govern that of Arcadius, 378. Scheme of Chrysaphius to assassinate Attila king of the Huns, vi, 80.
- the bishop of Sees and his whole chapter excommunicated, xii, 265, note.
- Evaris*, king of the Visigoths in Gaul, his conquests in Spain, vi, 206. Is vested with all the Roman conquests beyond the Alps by Odoacer king of Italy, 306.
- Europe*, evidences that the climate of, was much colder in ancient than in modern times, i, 246. This alteration accounted for, 247.

- Europe*, final division of, between the western and eastern empires, v, 187. Is ravaged by Attila king of the Huns, vi, 321. Is now one great republic, 444.
- Eudoxia*, empress, wife of Constantine, her steady friendship to Julian, iii, 183, 185. Is accused of arts to deprive Julian of children, 190.
- Eusebius*, his character of the followers of Ariemon, ii, 373. His own character, 490. His story of the miraculous appearance of the cross in the sky to Constantine the Great, iii, 264, 265.
- Eutropius*, the eunuch, great chamberlain to the emperors Arcadius, conceals his marriage with Eudocia, in opposition to the views of Rufinus, v, 147. Succeeds Rufinus in the emperor's confidence, 160. His character and administration, 276. Provides for his own security, in a new law against treason, 383. Takes sanctuary with St. Chrysostom, 391. His death, 393.
- Eutyches*, his opinion on the subject of the incarnation supported by the second council at Ephesus, viii, 300. And adhered to by the Armenians, 338.
- Exotic Sea*, description of the vessels used in navigating, i, 493.
- Exultation of the cross*, origin of the annual festival of, viii, 255.
- Exarch*, under the Greek empire, the office and rank of, ix, 139. Of Ravenna, the government of Italy settled in, and administered by, vii, 298; viii, 145.
- Excise duties* imposed by Augustus, i, 262.
- Excommunication from Christian communion*, the origin of, ii, 346; iii, 205.
- Exile*, voluntary, under accusation and conscious guilt, its advantages among the Romans, viii, 107.

F

- Faith*, and its operations, defined, ii, 315.
- Falcondus*, Hugo, character of his Himeria Sacula, x, 325, note. His lamentation on the transfer of the sovereignty of the island to the emperor Henry VI, 326.
- Fathers of the Christian church*, cause of their austere morality, ii, 319.
- Fausta*, empress, wife of Constantine the Great, causes of her being put to death, iii, 118.
- Favstina*, wife of Marcus Antoninus, her character, i, 125.
- Fauftina*, the widow of the emperor Constantine, countenances the revolt of Procopius against the emperor Valens, ix, 247.
- Festivals*, Pagan, great offence taken at, by the primitive Christians, ii, 293.
- Federal government*, the rudiments of, to be found among the Scythians, iv, 354, 355.
- Figures*, mystical, occasion of their first public and familiar use, x, 8.
- Finances of the Roman empire*, when the seat of it was removed to Constantinople, reviewed, iii, 81.
- Flavius*, his questionable history, whether to be connected with the invasion of Caladoun by the emperor Severus, i, 202.

- Fire*, Greek, the Saracen fleet destroyed by, in the harbour of Constantinople, x, 141. Is long preserved as a secret, 17. Its effects not to be compared with gunpowder, 140.
- Firmus*, an Egyptian merchant, his revolt against the emperor Autellian, ii, 45.
- Firmus*, the Moor, history of his revolt against the emperor Valentinian, iv, 301.
- Flagellation*, its efficacy in penance, and how proportioned, xi, 16.
- Flament*, Hannu, their number, and peculiar office, v, 93.
- Flaminian way*, its course described, vii, 284, note.
- Flavian*, archbishop of Constantinople, is killed at the second council of Ephesus, viii, 302.
- Floer*, golden, probable origin of the fable of, vii, 321.
- Flores*, the foundation of that city, v, 210, note. Is besieged by Asdagabous, and relieved by Stilicho, 217, 218.
- Florentius*, pretorian prefect of Gaul under Constantine, his character, iii, 233; iv, 7. Is condemned by the tribunal of Chalcedon, but suffered to escape by Julian, 48.
- Florianus*, brother of the emperor Tacitus, his eager usurpation of the imperial dignity, ii, 70.
- Felix* is consecrated bishop of Rome, to supersede Liberius, who was exiled, iii, 390. He is violently expelled, and his adherents slaughtered, 392.
- Felix*, an African bishop, his martyrdom, ii, 473.
- Fornication*, a doubtful plea for divorce, by gospel authority, viii, 65, note.
- France*, modern, computation of the number of its inhabitants, and the average of their taxation, iii, 91.
- the name of, whence derived, vi, 262. Derivation of the French language, 372, note.
- Childeric deposed, and Pepin appointed king, by papal sanction, ix, 132. Reign and character of Charlemagne, 174. Invasion of, by the Saracens, x, 18.
- Frangipani*, Corno, his profane violation of the persons of Pope Gelasius II and his college of cardinals, vii, 267. Derivation of his family name, 316.
- Franks*, their origin and confederacy, i, 412. They invade Gaul, and ravage Spain, 414, 415. They pass over into Africa, 415. Bold and successful return of a colony of, from the sea of Pontus, by sea, ii, 65.
- they over-run and establish themselves at Teutoburg in Germany, iii, 214.
- their fidelity to the Roman government, v, 223. Origin of the Merovingian race of their kings, vi, 98. How converted to Christianity, 272. Reign of their king Clovis, 310. Final establishment of the French monarchy in Gaul, 339. Their laws, 343. Give the name of Franks to their conquests in Gaul, 362. They degenerate into a state of anarchy, 372.
- they invade Italy, vii, 249, 293.
- their military character, x, 147.

Franks, the Goth, his character, and deadly quarrel with his countrymen Priulf, iv, 442. His operations against Gaimar, v, 353.

Frederic I, emperor of Germany, his tyranny in Italy, ix, 207. Engages in the third crusade, xi, 103. His disastrous expedition, 113, 141. Sacrifices Arnold of Brescia to the pope, xii, 973. His reply to the Roman ambassadors, 293.

Frederic II is driven out of Italy, ix, 306. His dispute with the pope, and reluctant crusade, xi, 135. Exhorts the European princes to unite in opposing the Tartars, 421.

Frederic III, the last emperor crowned at Rome, xii, 573.

Friesland, among the Romans, their rank in society, viii, 50.

Freemur of Laconia, account of, x, 107.

Frigerius, the Gothic chief, extricates himself from the hands of Lupicinus, governor of Thrace, iv, 580. Defeats him, 309. Battle of Salices, 397. His strength recruited by the accession of new tribes, 399. Negotiates with Valens, 406. Battle of Hadrianople, 408. The union of the Gothic tribes broken by his death, 431.

Frumentius was the first Christian missionary in Abyssinia, iii, 279.

Fulk of Neully, his ardour in preaching the fourth crusade, xi, 188.

G

Gabinus, king of the Quadi, is treacherously murdered by Marcellinus governor of Valeria, iv, 238.

Gaillard, M. character of his Histoire de Charlemagne, ix, 173, note.

Gaimar, the Goth, is commissioned by Sittich to execute his revenge on Raxius, prefect of the East, v, 116. His conduct in the war against the revoler Thengild, 389. Joins him, 393. His flight and death, 396.

Gala, probable derivation of the term, x, 126, note.

Galeata, the suburb of, at Constantinople, assigned to the Genoese, xi, 390.

Galerius is associated in the administration, as Caesar, by the emperor Diocletian, ii, 118. Is defeated by the Persians, 144. Surprises and overthrows Narse, 147. Assumes the title of Augustus, on the abdication of Diocletian, 186. His jealousy of Constantine, 192. Deems it prudent to acknowledge him Caesar, 193. His unsuccessful invasion of Italy, 202. Invests Licinius with the purple on the death of Severus, 208. His death, 212. From what causes he entertained an aversion to the Christians, 169. Obtains the countenance of Diocletian for persecuting them, 465. Publishes an edict of toleration just before his death, 484.

Galilee, two-fold application of that name in the infancy of Christianity, ii, 411. Why the emperor Julian applied this name to the Christians, iv, 109.

Gallienus, son of the emperor Valerian, is associated by him in the imperial throne, i, 411. Prohibits the senators from exercising

- military employments, 119. Character of his administration after the captivity of his father, 442. Names Claudius for his successor, ii, 4. Favoured the Christians, 459.
- Gallia* of the Greek empire described, x, 138.
- Gallus* elected emperor, on the minority of Herculianus, the son of Decius, i, 405.
- Gallus*, nephew of Constantine the Great, his education, iii, 171. Is invested with the title of Cæsar, 172. His cruelty and impetuosity, 173. His disgrace and death, 178. Embraced the doctrine, but neglected the precepts, of Christianity, iv, 66. Converts the grove of Daphne at Antioch to a Christian burial-place, 121.
- Games*, public, of the Romans, described, i, 312, 315; v, 284. Account of the factions of the circus, vii, 75.
- Ganges*, source of that river, xii, 15, note.
- Gaudensius*, the notary, is condemned to death under the emperor Julian, iv, 49.
- Gaul*, the province of, described, i, 31. The power of the druids suppressed there by Tiberius and Claudius, 52. Cities in, 78. Amount of the tribute paid by that province to Rome, 257. Is defended against the Franks by Posthumus, 414. Successions of warriors there, ii, 29. Invasion of, by the Lygians, 78. Revolt of the Bogaude suppressed by Maximian, 150. Progress of Christianity there, 367.
- proportion of the capitation-tax levied there by the Roman emperor, iii, 88. Is invaded by the Germans, 212. The government of, assigned to Julian, 215. His civil administration, 232. Is invaded by the Alemanni, under the emperor Valentinian, iv, 277. And under Gratian, 401.
- destruction of idols and temples there, by Martin, bishop of Tours, v, 105. Is over-run by the barbarous troops of Radagaisus, after his defeat by Stilicho, 274. Is settled by the Goths, Burgundians, and Franks, 250. Assembly of the seven provinces in, 309. Reign of Theodoric king of the Visigoths in, vi, 95. Origin of the Merovingian race of the kings of the Franks in, 65. Invasion of, by Attila king of the Huns, 107. Battle of Châlons, 112. Revolution of, on the death of the emperor Majorian, 296. Conversion of, to Christianity by the Franks, 297. Representation of the advantages it enjoyed under the Roman government, 306. Conquests and prosperity of Clovis king of the Visigoths, 308. Character and reign of Clovis, 310. The Alemanni conquered, 317. Subjugation of the Armoricans and the Roman troops, 322. Final establishment of the French monarchy in Gaul, 359. History of the Salic laws, 343. The lands of, how claimed and devolved by the barbarian conquerors of, 352. Domain and limitations of the Merovingian princes, 355. Usurpations of the Saxons, 378. Privileges of the Romans in, 362.
- Gelesius*, revolutions of the sea coast of, i, 331, note.
- Gelesian* era of the Turks, when called, x, 367.

- Gelasius*, Pope, his zeal against the celebration of the feast of Lupercalia, vi, 149. Deplores the miserable decay of Italy, 235.
- Gelastus II*, Pope, his rough treatment by Cerasio Frangipani, xii, 267.
- Gelimor* deposes Hilderic the Vandal king of Africa, and usurps the government, vii, 157. Is defeated by Belisarius, 178. His final defeat, 184. His disastrous flight, 189. Surrenders himself to Belisarius, 192. Graces his triumph, 194. His peaceful retirement, 196.
- General* of the Roman army, his extensive power, i, 89.
- Generosity*, Arabian, striking instances of, ix, 242.
- Gennadius*, the monk, his denunciation against a Greek union with the Latin church, xii, 207.
- Gennarid*, the Roman general, under the emperor Honorius, his character, v, 300.
- Gentari*, their mercantile establishment in the suburb of Pera at Constantinople, xi, 390. Their war with the emperor Constantine, 393.
- Genteric*, king of the Vandals in Spain, his character, vi, 13. Goes over to Africa on the invitation of Count Boniface, 14. His success there by the assistance of the Donatists, 18. Devastation of Africa by his troops, 20. Besieges Boniface in Hippo Regius, 21. His treacherous murder of Carthage, 28. Strengthens himself by an alliance with Attila king of the Huns, 49. His brutal treatment of his son's wife, daughter of Theodoric, 67. Raises a naval force, and invades Italy, 147. His sack of Rome, 151. Destroys the fleet of Majorian, 181, 182. His naval depredations on Italy, 187. His claims on the eastern empire, 189. Destroys the Roman fleet under Basilicus, 202. Was an Arian, and persecuted his catholic subjects, 280.
- Gentleman*, etymology of the term, xi, 36, note.
- Geoponici* of the emperor Constantine Porphyrogenitus, account of, x, 96.
- George* of Cappadocia supersedes Athanasius in the see of Alexandria, iii, 350. His scandalous history, and tragical death, iv, 125. Becomes the tutelary saint of England, 129.
- Gepide*, their encroachments on the eastern empire checked by the Lombards, vii, 273. Are reduced by them, viii, 121.
- Germanus*, nephew of the emperor Justinian, his character and promotion in the command of the army sent to Italy, vii, 379. His death, 380.
- Germany*, the rude institutions of that country, the original principles of European laws and manners, i, 241. Its ancient extent, 245. How peopled, 249. The natives unacquainted with letters in the time of Tacitus, 252. Had no cities, 264. Manners of the ancient Germans, 257. Population, 259. State of liberty among them, 264. Authority of their magistrates, 264. Conjugal faith and charity, 267. Their religion, 270. Arms and discipline, 275. Their laws, 280. General idea of the German tribes, 282. Probus carries the Roman arms into Germany, ii, 79. A frontier wall built by Probus, from the Rhine to the Danube, 81.
- invasions of Gaul by the Germans, iii, 213. iv, 277.

- Germany*, state of, under the emperor Charlemagne, iv, 183. The imperial crown established in the name and nation of Germany, by the first Otto, 191. Division of, among independent princes, 208. Formation of the Germanic constitution, 211. State assumed by the emperors, 215.
- Germanus*, Count, sets up Maximus as emperor in Spain, and loses his life in the attempt, v, 342, 343.
- Geta* and Carsacalla, sons of the emperor Severus, their fixed antipathy to each other, i, 206.
- Gibbers* of Persia, history of, v, 384.
- Gibraltar*, derivation of the name of, v, 368.
- Gildo* the Moor, his revolt in Africa, v, 162. His defeat and death, 171.
- Gladiators*, desperate enterprise and fate of a party of, reserved for the triumph of Probus, ii, 88. The combats of, abolished by the emperor Honorius, v, 305.
- Glycerius* is first emperor of Rome, and then bishop of Salona, vi, 219, 220. Murders Julius Nepos, and is made archbishop of Milan, 221.
- Gnostics*, character and account of the sect of, ii, 282. Principal sects into which they divided, 286. Their peculiar tenets, iii, 319; viii, 265.
- Godfrey* of Bouillon, his character, and engagement in the first crusade, xi, 80. His route to Constantinople, 41, 46. Is elected king of Jerusalem, 86. Compiles the empire of Jerusalem, 91. Form of his administration, 95.
- Gog* and Magog, the famous rampart of, described, vii, 142.
- Gormatha*, wife of Leovigild king of Spain, her pious cruelty to the princess Ingundia, vi, 295.
- Gold* of affliction, the tax so denominated in the eastern empire, abolished by the emperor Anastasius, vii, 101.
- Golden horn*, why the Bosphorus obtained this appellation in remote antiquity, iii, 7.
- Gordianus*, proconsul of Africa, his character and elevation to the empire of Rome, i, 282. His son associated with him in the imperial dignity, 284.
- Gordian*, the third and youngest, declared Cæsar, i, 291. Is declared emperor by the army, on the murder of Maximus and Balbinus, 306.
- Goths* of Scandinavia, their origin, i, 387. Their religion, 389. The Goths and Vandals supposed to be originally one great people, 392. Their emigrations to Prussia and the Ukraine, 399. They invade the Roman provinces, 397. They receive tribute from the Romans, 406. They subdue the Bosphorus, 421. Plunder the cities of Bithynia, 426. They ravage Greece, 420. Conclude a treaty with the emperor Anastasius, ii, 15. They ravage Illyricum, and are chastised by Constantine the Great, 254.
- their war with the Sarmatians, iii, 123. Are again routed by Constantine, 124. Gothic war under the emperors Valentinian and Valens, iv, 322. Are defeated by the Huns, 374. They

- implore the protection of the emperor Valens, 379. They are received into the empire, 382. They are oppressed by the Hunnan governors of Thrace, 3-3. Are provoked to hostilities, and defeat Lupicinus, 390. They ravage Thrace, 391. Battle of Saluzza, 397. They are strengthened by fresh swarms of their countrymen, 398. Battle of Hadrianople, 408. Secure the country from Hadrianople to Constantinople, 414. Massacre of the Gothic youth in Asia, 418. Their formidable union broken by the death of Fritigern, 431. Death and funeral of Athalaric, 432. Invasion and defeat of the Ostrogoths, 435. Are settled in Thrace, by Theodosius, 448. Their hostile sentiments, 440.
- Goths*, revolt of, under Hunorius, v, 176. They ravage Greece, under the command of Alaric, 179. They invade Italy, 190. The sack of Rome by, 310. Death of Alaric, 329. Victories of Wallia in Spain, 357. They are settled in Aquitaine, 358. See Gaul and Theodoric. Conquest of the Visigoths in Gaul and Spain, vi, 206. How the Goths were converted to the Christian religion, 268, 290.
- reign of Theodoric king of the Ostrogoths, vii, 2. The Goths in Italy, extinguished, 399.
- Government*, civil, the origin of, i, 362.
- Governors of provinces*, under the emperors, their great power and influence, iii, 56.
- Gratian* was the first emperor who refused the pontifical robe, iii, 409, note. Marries the princess Constantia, and succeeds to the empire, iv, 356. Defeats the Alamanii in Gaul, 402. Invents Theodosius with the empire of the East, 420.
- his character and conduct, v, 1. His flight from Maximus, and death, 8. Overthrow the ecclesiastical establishment of paganism, 95.
- Greece* is ravaged by the Goths i, 430. Is over-run by Alaric, the Goth, v, 179. Is seduced by the Turks, xii, 249.
- Greek church*, origin of the schism of, xi, 169; xii, 111, 145.
- Greek empire*. See Constantinople.
- Greeks*, why averse to the Roman language and manners, i, 161. The Greek becomes a scientific language among the Romans, 63. Character of the Greek language of Constantinople, xii, 115. When first taught in Italy, 120.
- Greek learning*, revival of, in Italy, xii, 116.
- Gregory the Great*, Pope, his pious presents to Recared king of Spain, vi, 301. Exhorts Thedelinda queen of the Lombards to propagate the Nicene faith, ibid. His enmity to the venerable buildings and learning of Rome, viii, 160. His birth and early profession, 162. His elevation to the pontificate, 164. Sends a mission to convert the Britons, 167. Sanctifies the usurpation of the emperor Phocas, 231.
- Gregory II*, Pope, his epistles to Leo III, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 134. Revolts against the Greek emperor, 138.
- Gregory VII*, Pope, his ambitious schemes, ix, 199. His contest

- with the emperor Henry III, x, 301. His retreat to Salerno, 304; xii, 256.
- Gregory*, prefect of Africa, history of him and his daughter, ix, 430, 431.
- Gregory Nazianzen*, his lamentation on the disgraceful discord among Christians, iii, 403. Loads the memory of the emperor Julian with invective, iv, 63. Censures Constantine for having spared his life, 79, note.
- is presented to the wretched see of Seesura, by his friend Archbishop Basil, x, 19, 20. His mission to Constantinople, 20. Is placed on the archiepiscopal throne by Theodosius, 24. His resignation and character, 30.
- Gracchus*, king of the Chaldees, attends Sapor king of Persia, in his invasion of Mesopotamia, iii, 204. Loses his son at the siege of Amida, 205. Returns home in grief, 209.
- Guardianship*, how vested and exercised, according to the Roman civil laws, viii, 68.
- Gubazes*, king of Colchos, his alliance with Chosroes king of Persia, vii, 320. Returns to his former connection with the emperor Justinian, 331. Is treacherously killed, 336.
- Guelfs* and Ghibelins, the parties of, in Italy, ix, 205; xii, 322.
- Guish*, the degrees of, in the penal laws of the Romans, viii, 96.
- Guiscard*, Robert, his birth and character, x, 270. Acquires the dukedom of Apulia, 274. His Italian conquests, 277. Besieges Durazzo, 287. Defeats the Greek emperor Alexius there, 294, 295. Engages in the cause of Pope Gregory VII, 302. His second expedition to Greece, and death, 304.
- Gundobald*, king of the Burgundians, is reduced by Clovis king of the Franks, v, 325. His mode of justifying the judicial combat, 352.
- Gunpowder*, the invention and use of, xii, 62.
- Guy of Languan*, king of Jerusalem, his character, xi, 124. Is defeated and taken prisoner by Saladin, 125.
- Gyarus*, a small island in the Aegean sea, on balance of its poverty, i, 259.

H

- Hadrian*, emperor, relinquishes the eastern conquest of Trajan, i, 11. Their characters compared, 12. His character contrasted with that of Antoninus Pius, ibid. His several adoptions of successors, 121. Founde the city of Ælia Capitolina on mount Sion, ii, 276.
- reforms the laws of Rome in the perpetual edict, viii, 15.
- Hadrianople*, battle of, between Constantine the Great and Licinius, ii, 258. Is successfully besieged by Frisigern the Goth, iv, 390. Battle of, between the emperor Valens and the Goths, 408.
- Hakem*, caliph of the Saracens, assumes a divine character to supplant the Mahometan faith, x, 379.
- Hamadan*, the Saracen dynasty of, in Mesopotamia, x, 82.

- Hasdrubal*, review of the state of Rome when he besieged that city, v, 255.
- Hasdrubalsonas*, nephew of Constantine the Great, is dignified with the title of king, iii, 116. Provinces assigned to him for a kingdom, 118. Is cruelly destroyed by Constantine, 132.
- Happiness*, instance how little it depends on power and magnificence, ii, 39.
- Harunian*, the Persian satrap, his interview with the caliph Omar, ix, 374.
- Harpiæ*, an ancient mythologic history, Le Clerc's conjecture concerning, iii, 5, note.
- Harun al Rashid*, caliph, his friendly correspondence with the emperor Charlemagne, ix, 186. His war with the Greek empire, ii, 52.
- Harrison*, the Saracen; conquers Carthage, ix, 401.
- Hawking*, the art and sport of, introduced into Italy by the Lombards, viii, 152.
- Heira*, the era of, how fixed, ix, 289.
- Helena*, the mother of Constantine, her parentage ascertained, ii, 130. Was converted to Christianity by her son, iii, 242, note.
- Helena*, sister of the emperor Constantius, married to Julian, iii, 136. Is reported to be deprived of children by the arts of the empress Eusebia, 190. Her death, iv, 19.
- Heliopolis* taken by the Saracens, ix, 405.
- Hell*, according to Mahomet, described, ix, 280.
- Hellepont* described, iii, 9.
- Helvetia*, amount of its population in the time of Cæsar, i, 339, note.
- Heriot*, his arrival in Britain, with succours for Vortigern, against the Caledonians, vi, 382. His establishment in Kent, 383, 387.
- Hermion* of the emperor Zeno, character of, viii, 511.
- Henry* succeeds his brother Baldwin as emperor of Constantinople, xi, 263. His character and administration, 265.
- Henry III*, emperor, his content with Pope Gregory VII, x, 301. Takes Rome, and sets up Pope Clement III, 302.
- Henry VI*, emperor, conquers and pillages the island of Sicily, x, 329.
- Henry the Fowler*, emperor of Germany, defeats the Turkish invaders, x, 313.
- Hiptarchy*, Saxon, establishment of, in Britain, vi, 384. Review of the state of, 395.
- Hiracian*, count of Africa, retains that province in obedience to Honorius, v, 308. His cruel usage of the refugees from the sack of Rome, by Alaric, 321. His revolt and death, 339, 340.
- Heraclius*, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 10.
- Heraclius*, deposes the eastern usurper Phocas, and is chosen emperor, viii, 216. Conquers of Chosroes II, king of Persia, 219. His distressful situation, 227. Accepts an ignominious peace from Chosroes, 230. His first expedition against the Persians, 232. His second Persian expedition, 236. Strengthens himself

- by an alliance with the Turks, 246. His third Persian expedition, 248. His treaty of peace with Persia, 255. His triumph and pilgrimage to Jerusalem 256. His theological inquiries, 350.
- Heracleus* marries his niece Martina, ix, 9. Leaves his two sons joint successors to the empire, 10. Invasion of his provinces by the Saracens, 386. Flies from Syria, 430.
- Heracles* the prefect, his expedition against the Vandals in Africa, vi, 199.
- Heracleus* the eunuch, instigates the emperor Valentinian III. to the murder of the patrician Aëtius, vi, 138. His death, 141.
- Herbelot*, character of his Bibliothèque Orientale, ix, 303, note.
- Hercynias* forest, the extent of, unknown in the time of Caesar, i, 347, note.
- Heresy* in religion, the origin of, traced, ii, 284. Edict of Constantine the Great, against, iii, 307.
- Hermaric*, king of the Ostrogoths, his conquests, iv, 319. His death, 376.
- Hermenegild*, prince of Bortica, his marriage with Ingundis princess of Austrasia, and conversion to the Nicene faith, vi, 297. Revolt and death, 298.
- Hermits* of the East, their mortified course of life, vi, 263. Miracles performed by them and their relics, 266.
- Hermodorus*, the Ephesian, assists the Romans in compiling their twelve tables of laws, viii, 6.
- Hermogenes*, master-general of the cavalry, is killed in the attempt to banish Paul bishop of Constantinople, iii, 294.
- Hers* and Leander, the story of, by whom controverted and defended, iii, 9, note.
- Herodian*, his life of Alexander Severus, why preferable to that in the Augustan history, i, 254, note.
- Herodes Atticus*, his extraordinary fortune and munificence, i, 72.
- Herodorus*, his character of the Persian worship, i, 322.
- Heralds*, of Germany and Poland, their character, vii, 21.
- Hilarion*, the monk of Palestine, account of, vi, 244.
- Hilary*, bishop of Poitiers, his remarkable observations on the diversity of Christian doctrines, iii, 338. His exposition of the term Humiliation, 341.
- Hilary*, Pope, censures the emperor Anthemius for his tolerating principles, vi, 195.
- Hilderic*, the Vandal king of Africa, his indulgence to his catholic subjects displeases both the Arians and Athenians, vii, 156, 157. Is deposed by Gelimer, 157. Is put to death, 177.
- Hindus* of the East, not the disciples of Zoroaster, ix, 452, note.
- Hindustan*, conquest of, by Tamerlane, xii, 13.
- Hips*, Reftar, siege of, by Genseric king of the Vandals, vi, 21.
- History*, the principal subjects of, i, 382.
- Holy war*, the justice of it inquired into, xi, 12.
- Homocide*, how commuted by the Salic laws, vi, 346.
- Homocidius*, origin, and use of that term at the council of Nice, iii, 333. And Humiliation, the distinction between, 341.

- Hannas*, war of, ix, 309.
- Harobertus*, archbishop of Milan, is, with his clergy, driven from his see, by the Lombards, viii, 187.
- Honoris*, princess, sister of the emperor Valentinian III, her history, vi, 103.
- Honorius*, son of Theodosius the Great, is declared emperor of the West, by his dying father, v, 86. Marries Maria, the daughter of Stilicho, 172, 173. His character, 174. Flies from Milan on the invasion of Italy by Alaric, 196. His triumphant entry into Rome, 204. Abolishes the combats of gladiators, 207. Fixes his residence at Ravenna, 210. Orders the death of Stilicho, 242. His impolitic measures and cruelty unite his barbarian soldiers against him under Alaric, 232. His councils distracted by the eunuchs, 301. His abject overtures to Attila and Alaric, 307. His last acts, and death, 340. His triumph for the reduction of Spain by Wallia the Goth, 258. Is suspected of incest with his sister Placidia, vi, 2, 3. His persecution of the Donatists in Africa, 16.
- Hævar*, the new snake of, introduced in the city of Constantinople, iii, 34; x, 119.
- Hermisdas*, a fugitive Persian prince, in the court of the emperor Constantine, his remarks on the city of Rome, iii, 194, note. His history, and station under Julian, iv, 152.
- Hermanus*, the son of Chusruas, king of Persia, his accession, viii, 178. His character, 179. Is deposed, and at length killed, 184-185.
- Hemir*, of Arabia, their peculiar qualities, ix, 224.
- Hemir*, the son of Ali, his tragical death, ix, 343.
- Hospitaliers*, knights, of St. John of Jerusalem, popularity and character of the order of, xi, 92.
- Heraclius*, the minor son of the emperor Diocles, elected emperor, under the guardianship of Gallus, i, 405.
- Hugh*, king of Burgundy, his marriage with Matozis, and expulsion from Rome by Alberic, ix, 201.
- Hugh*, count of Vermandois, engages in the first crusade, xi, 32. Is shipwrecked and made captive by the Greek emperor Alexis Comnenus, 45. His return, 72.
- Hamas nature*, its natural properties, v, 320.
- Hume*, Mr. his natural history of religion, the best commentary on the polytheism of the ancients, i, 46, note. His difficulty as to the extent of the imperial palace at Rome, resolved, 212, note. Charges the most refined and philosophic sects with intemperance, 329, note.
- Hungary*, establishment of the Huns in, vi, 28. State of, under the emperor Charlemagne, ix, 154. Terror excited by their first approach to Europe, v, 203. Their character, 203.
- Huslader*, John, his exploits against the Turks, xii, 157. His defence of Belgrade, and death, 167.
- Huneric*, the son of Genseric, king of the Vandals, persecutes his

- catholic subjects, vi, 280. His cruelty to the catholics of Tiquan, 298.
- Huns*, their original seat, and their conquests, iv, 359. Their decline, 364. Their emigrations, 367. Their victories over the Goths, 374, 377.
- they drive other barbarous tribes before them, upon the Roman provinces, v, 212. Their establishment in Hungary, vi, 33. Character of their king Attila, 41. Their invasion of Persia, 47. The empire of, extinguished by the death of Attila, 155.
- Hunting* of wild beasts, when a virtue, and when a vice, i, 151. Is the school of war, iv, 350.
- Hypatia*, the female philosopher, murdered in the church at Alexandria, viii, 281.
- Hypatius*, sedition of, at Constantinople, viii, 65.

I and J.

- Jacobites* of the East, history of the sect of, viii, 350.
- James*, St., his legendary exploits in Spain, ii, 308.
- Janzariet*, first institution of those troops, xi, 446.
- Iberian* and Caspian gates of mount Caucasus, distinguished, vā, 110.
- The Iberian gates occupied by Cabades king of Persia, 141.
- Idatius*, his account of the misfortunes of Spain by an irruption of the barbarous nations, v, 352.
- Idolatry* ascribed to the agency of demons, by the primitive Christians, ii, 288. Derivation of the term, and its successive applications, iii, 410, note.
- Jerome*, his extravagant representation of the derangement of Pamonius by the Goths, iv, 447. His influence over the widow Paula, vi, 248.
- Jerusalem*, its situation, destruction, and profanation, iv, 99. Pilgrimages to, and curious relics preserved there, 100. Abortive attempts of the emperor Julian to rebuild the temple, 103.
- a magnificent church erected there to the Virgin Mary by Justinian, vii, 123. The vessels of the temple brought from Africa to Constantinople by Belisarius, 194. Is conquered by Charles II king of Spain, 220. Insurrection of the monks there, viii, 310.
- the city conquered by the Saracens, ix, 411. Great resort of pilgrims to, x, 270. Conquered af, by the Turks, 283.
- is taken from the Turks by the Egyptians, xi, 77. Is taken by the crusaders, 84. Is erected into a kingdom under Godfrey of Bouillon, 87. Succession of its Christian princes, 134. Is pillaged by the Caraceniens, 158.
- Jerusalem*, New, described according to the ideas of the primitive Christians, ii, 202.
- Jerniz*, Portuguese, persecute the eastern Christians, viii, 313. Their labours in, and expulsion from, Abyssinia, 574.
- Jews*, an obscure, unrecal, obstinate race of men, ii, 308. Re-

- view of their history, 270. Their religion the basis of Christianity, 274. The promises of divine favour extended by Christianity to all mankind, ibid. The immortality of the soul not inculcated in the law of Moses, 299. Why there are no Hebrew gospels extant, 357. Provoked the persecutions of the Roman emperors, 384.
- Jews*, those of a more liberal spirit adopted the theological system of Plato, iii, 316. Their conversion under the emperor Constantine and Constantius, iv, 97. Absentive attempt of Julian to rebuild the temple of Jerusalem, 103.
- miraculous conversion of a number of, at Minorca, v, 132, note.
- Persecution of, in Spain, vi, 302.
- are persecuted by the catholics in Italy, vii, 40. And by Cyril at Alexandria, viii, 279. How plagued by the emperor Justinian, 322.
- those in Arabia subdued by Mahomet, ix, 302. Assist the Saracens in the reduction of Spain, ix, 476.
- massacres of, by the first crusaders, xi, 25, 26.
- Jerdogird*, king of Persia, is said to be left guardian to Theodorus the Younger, by the emperor Arcadius, v, 413. His war with Theodorus, 428.
- Jethum*, the small island of, serves as a place of refuge for Romans who flee from the sack of Rome by Alaric, v, 320.
- Junianus*, bishop of Antioch, the Christian fortitude displayed in his epistles, ii, 437.
- Kakadia*, the Saracen dynasty of, x, 82.
- Illustratio*, the title of, how limited in the times of Roman simplicity, and how extended when Constantinople became the seat of empire, iii, 34.
- Idyricum* described, i, 35.
- Imager*, introduction of, into the Christian church, ix, 113. The worship of, derived from paganism, 115. Are condemned by the council of Constantinople, 126. The adoration of, justified by Pope Gregory II, 134. And sanctified by the second council of Nice, 105.
- Imperator*, in the Roman history, explained, i, 99, note. The imperial prerogatives, 100. The court, 110. The sense of this appellation altered by long use, ii, 163.
- Incarnation*, theological history of the doctrine of, viii, 261.
- Incess*, natural, and arbitrary, distinguished, viii, 68.
- India*, account of the Christians of St. Thomas in, viii, 336. Persecution of, by the Portuguese, 347.
- Indiction*, the memorable era of, whence dated, ii, 220, note. The name and use of, in the middle ages, whence derived, iii, 83.
- Indulgences*, in the Romish church, the nature of, explained, xi, 16, 17.
- Izandis*, princess of Austria, is married to Henry eighth prince of Wales, and cruelly treated by his mother Gertruda, v, 297.

- Inheritance*, paternal, subject to parental discretion among the Romans, i, 264. The Roman law of, viii, 74. Testamentary dispositions of property, 77. The Voconian law, how evaded, 81.
- Injuries*, redress of the Roman law for the redress of, viii, 87.
- Innocent III.* Pope, enjoyed the plenitude of papal power, xi, 132.
- Inquisition*, the first erection of that tribunal, xi, 132.
- Indicates of Justinian*, an analysis of, viii, 47.
- Interest of money*, how regulated by the Roman law, viii, 86.
- Isaac*, Pope, the story of, fictitious, ix, 197, note.
- John*, principal secretary to the emperor Honorius, usurps the empire after his death, vi, 6.
- John*, the almsgiver, archbishop of Alexandria, relieves the Jewish refugees when Jerusalem was taken by the Persians, viii, 221. His extraordinary liberality of the church treasure, 263.
- John*, bishop of Antioch, arrives at Ephesus after the meeting of the council, and, with his bishops, decides against Cyril, viii, 221. Co-sinister between him and Cyril, 223.
- John of Aphl*, patriarch of Constantinople, his pride, and confederacy against John Cantacuzene, xi, 373.
- John of Beienne*, emperor of Constantinople, xi, 374.
- John of Cappadocia*, praetorian prefect of the East, under the emperor Justinian, his character, vii, 109. Is disgraced by the empress Theodora, and becomes a bishop, 110. Opposes the African war, 159. His fraud in supplying the army with bread, 109.
- John Comnenus*, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 86.
- John Damascenus*, St. his history, ix, 129, note.
- John of Lycopolis*, the hermit, his character, and singular promise to the emperor Theodosius the Great, v, 79.
- John*, the Monophysite bishop of Asia, is employed by the emperor Justinian to root out pagans and heretics, viii, 321.
- John XII.* Pope, his flagitious character, ix, 198.
- John XXIII.* Pope, his prodigious character, vii, 373.
- John*, St. the Evangelist, reveals the true sense of Plato's doctrine of the Logos, iii, 318.
- John the Sanguinary* seizes the Gothic treasures in Picenum, and obliges Vitiges to raise the siege of Rome, vii, 244.
- John Zimisces* murders the Greek emperor Nicephorus, and succeeds him, ix, 66. His eastern victories, x, 88. Defeats Swatodans, czar of Russia, 230.
- Jonas*, one of the Hebride islands, its ancient monastic eminence, vi, 246.
- Jonar*, renegade of Damascus, story of, ix, 397.
- Jordan*, character of his work, De Originibus Sclavnicis, x, 197, note.
- Joseph*, the Caristian, governor of Bexem, kills the sultan Alp Arslan, x, 302.
- Josaphat*, the mention of Jesus Christ in his history, a forgery, ii, 405, note. His opinion, that Plato derived knowledge from the Jews, controverted, iii, 314, note.

- Jaxia* is elected emperor by the troops of Julian, on their retreat from Assyria, iv, 205. His treaty with Sapor king of Persia, 209. His death, 213.
- Jovian* and Herculianus, new bodies of guards instituted to supersede the praetorian bands, ii, 161.
- Jovinian* of Verona, his punishment by a Roman synod, for heresy, v, 101.
- Jordan* reduces the Alemanni, who had invaded Gaul, iv, 279, 280.
- account of his revolt against the emperor Honorius in Germany, v, 347.
- Jovius*, praetorian prefect under the emperor Honorius, succeeds Olympius as his confidential minister, v, 209. His negotiations with Alaric obstructed, 301. Deserts Honorius, and goes over to Alaric, and the new emperor Avitus, 307.
- Jeges*, her marriage with the Greek emperor Leo, ix, 31. Her ambition, and barbarity to her son Constantine, 32. Restores images to public devotion, 104.
- Ireland* was first colonized from Scotland, iv, 294. Derivation of the name of its tutelary saint, Patrick, vi, 229, not.
- Irene I.*, Constantine, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 74.
- Irene II.*, Angeles, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 108. His character and reign, xi, 184. Is deposed by his brother Alexius, 185. Is restored by the crusaders, 217. His death, 223.
- Iscat*, archbishop of Armenia, his apology for the vices of king Artashes, v, 401.
- Isauria*, the rebellion there against the emperor Gallienus, i, 454.
- Isaurians*, subjugation of, by the eastern emperors, vii, 129.
- Isidore*, Cardinal, his ill treatment in Russia, xii, 148. Receives an act of union from the Greek clergy at Constantinople, 206.
- Isidore*, his price for the tuition of his pupils, vii, 140.
- Italy*, the dominion of, under Odoacer, succeeds the extinction of the western empire, vi, 224. Its miserable state at this era, 234. Conversion of the Lombards of, to the Nicene faith, 301.
- is reduced by Theodoric the Ostrogoth, vii, 15. His administration, 17. Government of, according to the Roman law, by Theodoric, 26. Its flourishing state at this time, 38. How supplied with silk from China, 91. History of Amalaswintha, queen of Italy, 200. Invasion of, by Belisarius, 217. Siege of Rome by the Goths, 224. Invasion of Italy, by the Franks, 249. Revolt of the Goths, 253. Expedition of the emperor Narcis, 281. Invasion of, by the Franks and Alemanni, 293. Government of, under the exarchs of Ravenna, 398. Conquests of Alboin king of the Lombards in, viii, 126. Divided of, 142. How divided between the Lombards, and the exarchs of Ravenna, 145.
- growth of the papal power in, ix, 131. Revolt of, against the Greek emperors, 138. The exarchate of Ravenna granted to the pope, 136. Extent of the dominions of Charlemagne there, 182. The power of the German Caxars destroyed by the rise of the commercial cities there, 204. Factions of the Gauls and Chibellins, 204. Conflict of the Saracens, Latins, and Greeks in, x, 247.

Italy, revival of Greek learning in, 15, 118. Authors consulted for the history of, 294, note.

Jakobs, popular, a revival of the secular games, i, 312, note; vii, 310. The nation of, accelerated, 312.

Jude, St. examination of his grandsons before the tribunal of the procurator of Judaea, ii, 414.

Judgments of God, in the Salic laws, how determined, vi, 349.

Judgments, popular, of the Romans, displayed, viii, 164.

Julia Domna, wife of the emperor Severus, her character, 4, 205. Her death, 228.

Julian, the nephew of Constantine the Great, his education, 33, 171. His dangerous situation, on the death of his brother Gallus, 181. Is sent to Athens, where he cultivates philosophy, 183. Is recalled by Constantine, 186. Is invested with the title of Cæsar, 188. Is equated to the government of Gaul, 215. His first campaign, 217. Battle of Strasburg, 222. Defeats the Franks at Tolandria, 226. His three expeditions beyond the Rhine, 228. Restores the cities of Gaul, 230. His civil administration, 232. His account of the theological calamities of the empire under Constantine, 294. Constantine grows jealous of him, iv, 9. The Gaulish legions are ordered into the East, 4. Is related emperor by the troops, 11. His embassy and epistle to Constantine, 15. His fourth and fifth expeditions beyond the Rhine, 17. Declares war against Constantine, and abjures the Christian religion, 22. His march from the Rhine into Illyricum, 25. Enters Sirmium, 28. Publishes apologies for his conduct, 29. His triumphant entry into Constantinople on the death of Constantine, 36. His private life and civil government, 37. His reformations in the imperial palace, 41. Becomes a deacon to avoid suppers, 45. Erects a tribunal for the trial of the evil ministers of Constantine, 46. Dismisses the spies and informers employed by his predecessor, 50. His love of freedom and the republic, 52. His kindness to the Grecian cities, 55. His abilities as an orator, 58. And as a judge, 59. His character, ibid. His apostasy accounted for, 64. Adopts the pagan mythology, 67. His theological system, 72. His initiation into the Eleusinian mysteries, and his fanaticism, 75. His hypocritical dissimulation, 78. Wins a vindication of his apostasy, 81. His edict for a general toleration, 82, 84. His pagan superstitious soul, 85. His censorious letters for the reformation of the pagan religion, 88. His industry in gaining proselytes, 94. His address to the Jews, 97. History of his attempt to rebuild the temple at Jerusalem, 100. Transfers the revenues of the Christian church to the heathen priests, 110. Prohibits Christian schools, 111. Obliges the Christians to relinquish the pagan temples, 115. Restores the sacred grove and temple of Daphne, 121. Punishes the Christians of Antioch for burning that temple, 122. His treatment of the cities of Edessa

- and Alexandria, 122. Banishes Athanasius, 183. The philosophical fable of his Caesars delineated, 139. Meditates the conquest of Persia, 143. Popular discontents during his residence at Antioch, 146. Occasion of writing his Mimnogen, 150. His march to the Euphrates, 154. He enters the Persian territories, 161. Invades Assyria, 169. His personal conduct in this enterprise, 174. His address to his discontented troops, 176. His successful passage over the Tigris, 180. Burns his fleet, 183. His retreat and distress, 193. His death, 202. His funeral, 223.
- Julius*, count, offers to betray Spain into the hands of the Arabs, ix, 467. His advice to the victorious Turks, 475.
- Julian*, the papal legate, exhorts Ladislaus king of Hungary and Poland, to breach of faith with the Turks, xii, 159. His death and character, 165.
- Julius*, master-general of the troops in the eastern empire, conceals a general massacre of the Gothic youth in Asia, iv, 419.
- Jurispudence*, Roman, a review of, viii, 1. Was polished by Grecian philosophy, 25. Abuses of, 109.
- Justin the Elder*, his military promotion, v, 54. His elevation to the empire, and character, 56. His death, 62.
- Justin II*, emperor, succeeds his uncle Justinian, viii, 113. His firm behaviour to the ambassadors of the Avars, 116. His abdication, and investiture of Tiberius, as his successor, 135.
- Justin Martyr*, his decision in the case of the Ebionites, ii, 280. His extravagant account of the progress of Christianity, 369. Occasion of his own conversion, 372.
- Justina*, the popular story of her marriage with the emperor Valentinian examined, ix, 334. Her infant son Valentinian II invested with the imperial ensigns, on the death of his father, 336. Her contest with Ambrose, archbishop of Milan, v, 40. Flies from the invasion of Maximus, with her son, 48.
- Justinian*, emperor of the East, his birth and promotion, vii, 54. His orthodoxy, 59. Is invested with the diadem by his uncle Justin, 60. Marries Theodora, 70. Pacifies the blue faction of the circus, 78. State of agriculture and manufacture in his provinces, 88. Introduces the culting of the silk worm, and manufacture of silk, into Greece, 97. State of his revenue, 100. His avarice and profusion, 102. Taxes and monopolies, 105, 106. His ministers, 109. His public buildings, 112. Found the church of St. Sophia at Constantinople, 117. His other public works, 122. His European fortifications, 123. His Asiatic fortifications, 132. He suppresses the schools of Athens, 142. And the consular dignity, 152. Purchases a peace from the Persians, 156, 307. Undertakes to restore Hilderic king of Carthage, 158. Reduction of Africa, 186. His instructions for the government of, 187. His acquisitions in Spain, 203. His desultory negotiations in Italy, 210. Weakness of his empire, 270. Receives an embassy from the Avars, 291. And from the Turks, 293. Persian war, 315. His negotiations with Chosroes, 337. His alliance with the Abyssinians, 343. Neglects the Italian war under Belisarius, 362.

Sees the government of Italy under the exarch of Ravenna, 398. Disgrace and death of Belisarius, 407. His death and character, 409. Comets and calamities in his reign, 412. His code, pandects, and institutes, viii, 1. His theological character and government, 317. His persecuting spirit, 320. His orthodoxy, 324. Died a heretic, 328.

Justinian II, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 17.

Justinian, the son of Germanus, his conspiracy with the empress Sophia, and successes against the Persians, viii, 137, 138.

Julian, his remarks on the crowded state of the inhabitants of Rome, v, 208.

K

Khan, import of this title in the northern parts of Asia, iv, 353; v, 212.

King, the title of, conferred by Constantine the Great on his nephew Hannibalianus, iii, 116.

Kindred, degrees of, according to the Roman civil law, viii, 75.

Knight-hood, how originally conferred, and its obligations, xi, 87.

Koran of Mahomet, account and character of, ix, 267.

Koreish, the tribe of, acquire the custody of the Caba at Mecca, ix, 246. Pedigree of Mahomet, 253. They oppose his pretensions to a prophetic character, 286. Flight of Mahomet, 298. Battle of Beder, 299. Battle of Uhud, 301. Mecca surrendered to Mahomet, 307.

L

Labarum, or standard of the cross, in the army of Constantine the Great, described, iii, 258.

Labro, the civilian, his diligence in business and composition, viii, 25. His professional character, 30.

Lactantius, difficulties in ascertaining the date of his Divine Institutions, iii, 238, note. His flattering prediction of the influence of Christianity among mankind, 249. Inculcates the divine right of Constantine to the empire, 250.

Ladislaus, king of Hungary and Poland, leads an army against the Turks, xii, 157. His breach of faith with them, 158.

Ladislaus, king of Naples, harasses Rome during the schism of the papacy, xii, 374.

Laelus, pretorian prefect, conspires the death of Commodus, and seizes the empire on Pertinax, i, 156, 157.

Lady, when first distinguished from the clergy, ii, 340.

Lampadius, a Roman senator, boldly condemns the treaty with Alari the Goth, v, 298.

Lance, holy, narrative of the miraculous discovery of, xi, 73.

Land, how assessed by the Roman emperors, iv, 85. How divided by the barbarians, vi, 553. Allodial, and Salic, distinguished, 557. Of Italy, how partitioned by Theodoric the Ostrogoth, vii, 17.

Laudium, its ancient splendour, i, 80.

GENERAL INDEX.

- Laſcaris, Theodore*, establishes an empire at Nice, xi, 253. His character, 303.
- Laſcaris, Theodore II*, his character, xi, 312.
- Laſcaris, James*, the Greek grammarian, his character, xj, 180.
- Latin church*, separation of its separation from the Greek church, xi, 159. Corruption and schism of, xii, 92. Recovery of, with the Greek church, 141. The subsequent Greek schism, 145.
- Latins*, the right of, explained, i, 58.
- Laure*, in monkish history, explained, vi, 260.
- Law*, review of the professions of, under the emperors, iii, 52.
- Laws of Rome*, review of, viii, 1. Those of the kings, 4. Of the twelve tables, 6. Of the people, 11. Decrees of the senate, and edicts of the pætors, 13. Constitutions of the emperors, 16. Their rescripts, 19. The three codes of, 29. The forms of, ſic. Secession of civil lawyers, 221. Reformation of, by Justinian, 23. A bolition and revival of the penal laws, 184.
- Levi*, the tribe of, in Epichon's account of, vii, 327.
- Le Clerc*, character of his ecclesiastical history, viii, 260, note.
- Legacies and inheritances* taxed by Augustus, i, 263. How regulated by the Roman law, viii, 79.
- Legions*, in the Roman army under the emperors, described, i, 118. General distribution of the legions, 27. The size of, reduced by Constantine the Great, iii, 62.
- Leo of Thrace* is made emperor of the East, by his master Aspar, vi, 191. Was the first Christian potentate who was crowned by a priest, 192. Confers the empire of the West on Anthemius, 195. His engagement against the Vandals in Africa, 199. Murders Aspar and his son, vii, 4.
- Leo III*, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 23. His edicts against images in churches, 124. Revolt of Italy, 128.
- Leo IV*, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 29.
- Leo V*, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 37.
- Leo VI*, the philosopher, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 53. Enslaves the power of the senate, x, 134.
- Leo*, bishop of Rome, his character and embassy from Valentinian III to Atilia king of the Huns, vi, 131. Intercedes with Genseric king of the Vandals for clemency to the city of Rome, 131. Calls the council of Chlundern, viii, 303.
- Leo III*, Pope, his miraculous recovery from the assault of emissaries, ix, 172. Crowns Charlemagne emperor of the Romans, 173.
- Leo IV*, Pope, his reign, x, 64. Founds the Læzanne city, 68.
- Leo IX*, Pope, his expedition against the Normans of Apulia, x, 267. His treaty with them, 270.
- Leo*, archbishop of Thessalonica, one of the restorers of Greek learning, x, 157.
- Leo*, general of the East, under the emperor Arcadius, his character, v, 383.
- Leo Pilatus*, first Greek professor at Florence, and in the West, his character, xii, 124.
- Leo*, the Jew proselyte, history of his family, xii, 315.

- Leonar*, the quæstor, his embassy from Constantine to Julian, iv, 28.
Leonar city at Rome founded, i, 66.
Leonius is taken brain-prison, and chosen emperor of Constantinople, on the deposition of Justinian II, ix, 18.
Leovigild, Gothic king of Spain, his character, vi, 296. Revolt and death of his son Hermenegild, 298.
Letters, a knowledge of, the test of civilization in a people, i, 532.
Lucius the Pious, emperor of the Romans, vi, 192.
Lucius II, emperor of the Romans, ix, 153. His epistle to the Greek emperor Basil I, x, 248.
Libanius, his account of the private life of the emperor Julian, ix, 38. And of his divine visions, 77. Approbates the dissimulation of Julian, 79, 80. His character, 151. His eclogium on the emperor Valens, 211.
Libertus, bishop of Rome, is banished by the emperor Constantine, for refusing to assist in deposing Athanasius, iii, 375, 376.
Liberiy, public, the only sure guarantee of, against an aspiring prince, i, 95.
Licinius is invested with the purple by the emperor Galerius, ii, 205. His alliance with Constantine the Great, 237. Defeats Maximian, 223. His cruelty, 239. Is defeated by Constantine at Cibalæ, 246. And at Mordis, 247. Peace concluded with Constantine, 249. Second civil war with Constantine, 255. His humiliation, and death, 263.
 — Fate of his son, iii, 111. Concurred with Constantine in publishing the edict of Milan, 244. Violated this engagement by oppressing the Christians, 252. Cæcilius's account of his vision, 261.
Lieutenant, imperial, his office and rank, i, 101.
Lightning, apparition of the Romans with reference to persons and places struck with, ii, 97.
Lombards, Saranian slaves, rebel their masters, and marry possession of their country, iii, 126. Extinction of, by Constantine, 108.
Literature, revival of, in Italy, xii, 119. Ancient use and abuse of, 138.
Lithuania, its late conversion to Christianity, x, 243.
Lucius, Count, is defeated and taken captive in Gaul by Theodorik, vi, 98.
Liutprand, king of the Lombards, attacks the city of Rome, ix, 146.
Liutprand, bishop of Cremona, ambassador to Constantinople, testimony of his audience with the emperor, x, 125.
Luce, Plato's doctrine of, iii, 315. Is expounded by St. John the Evangelist, 219. Athanasius confesses himself unable to comprehend it, 222. Controversies on the eternity of, 229.
Lucathia, great, his office under the Greek emperors, x, 102.
Lombardy, ancient, described, i, 35. Conquest of, by Charlemagne, ix, 120.

Lombards, derivation of their name, and review of their history, vii, 274. Are employed by the emperor Justinian to check the Gepids, 276. Actions of their king Alboin, viii, 117. They reduce the Gepids, 121. They over-run that part of Italy now called Lowland, 126. Extent of their kingdom, 147. Language and manners of the Lombards, 148. Government and laws, 153, 156.

Longinus, his representation of the degeneracy of his age, i, 94. Is put to death by Aurelian, ii, 43.

—— Is sent to supersede Narces, as exarch of Ravenna, viii, 123. Receives Bazianus the fugitive queen of the Lombards, 122.

Lothaire I. emperor of the Romans, ix, 189.

Louis VII. of France, is rescued from the treachery of the Greeks by Roger king of Sicily, x, 318. Undertakes the second crusade, xi, 105. His disastrous expedition, 115.

Louis IX. of France, his crusades to the Holy Land, xi, 123. His death, 163. Procured a valuable stock of relics from Constantinople, 278.

Lucian, the severity of his satire against the heathen mythology, accounted for, i, 49.

Lucian, count of the East, under the emperor Arcadius, his cruel treatment by the prefect Rufinus, v, 146.

Lucian, presbyter of Jerusalem, his miraculous discovery of the body of St. Stephen, the first Christian martyr, v, 128.

Lucilian, governor of Illyria, is surprised, and kindly treated by Julian, iv, 28. His death, 232.

Lucilla, sister of the emperor Commodus, her attempt to get him assassinated, i, 140, 141.

Lucius II. and III. Popes, their disastrous reigns, xii, 363.

Lucrine lake described, with its late destruction, v, 270, 271, note.

Lucullan villa in Campania, its destruction and history, vi, 210.

Lupercalia, the feast of, described, and continued under the Christian emperors, vi, 197.

Lupicinus, the Roman governor of Thrace, oppresses the Gothic emigrants there, iv, 385. Rashly provokes them to hostilities, 389. Is defeated by them, 390.

Lustral contribution in the Roman empire, explained, iii, 64.

Lucius, Marcus, his character, as a reformer, x, 162.

Luxury, the only means of correcting the unequal distribution of property, i, 87.

Lygians, a formidable German nation, account of, ii, 78.

Lyon, battle of, between the competitors Severus and Albinus, i, 192.

Macedonius, the Asian bishop of Constantinople, his contests with his competitor Paul, iii, 293. Fatal consequences on his restoring the body of the emperor Constantine to the church of St. Arachia, 305. His cruel persecutions of the catholics and novatians, 367. His exile, viii, 316.

- Macrianus*, pretorian prefect under the emperor Valerian, his character, i, 436.
- Macrianus*, a prince of the Alamanni, his steady alliance with the emperor Valerianian, iv, 286.
- Marrinus*, his accession to the empire predicted by an African, i, 922. Accelerates the completion of the prophecy, ibid. Purchases a peace with Parthia, 339.
- Madaya*, the capital of Persia, sacked by the Saracens, ix, 368.
- Mazanius* of Palmyra assassinates his uncle Odenathus, ii, 35.
- Mazra*, its situation, i, 37.
- Magi*, the worship of, in Persia, reformed by Artaxerxes, i, 318. Abridgment of the Persian theology, 330. Simplicity of their worship, 332. Ceremonies and moral precepts, 325. Their power, 325.
- Mazur*, severe prosecution of persons for the crime of, at Rome and Antioch, ix, 252.
- Maugentius* assumes the empire in Gaul, iii, 148. Death of Constant, 149. Sends an embassy to Constantius, 151. Makes war against Constantius, 157. Is defeated at the battle of Mursa, 159. Kills himself, 166.
- Mahomed*, the Granerid, his twelve expostitions into Hindostan, x, 333. His character, 338.
- Mahomet*, the prophet, his embassy to Charoos II, king of Persia, viii, 296.
- his genealogy, birth, and education, ix, 253. His person and character, 255. Assumes his prophetic mission, 260. Insults to the unity of God, 262. His revolutionary mission of Jesus Christ, 265. His Koran, 267. His miracles, 270. His precepts, 273. His hell, and paradise, 279. The best authorities for his history, 282, note. Converts his own family, 283. Preaches publicly at Mecca, 285. Escapes from the Koreishites there, 288. Is received as prince of Medina, 292. His regal dignity, and sacerdotal office, ibid. Declares war against idolatry, 295. Battle of Beder, 299. Battle of Ohud, 301. Subdues the Jews of Arabia, 302. Submission of Mecca to him, 307. He conquers Arabia, 309. His sickness and death, 317, 318. His character, 320. His private life, 324. His wives, 325. His children, 329. His posterity, 346. Remarks on the great spread and permanency of his religion, 349.
- Mahomet* the son of Bajazet, his reign, xii, 30.
- Mahomet* II, sultan of the Turks, his character, xii, 152. His reign, 183. Indications of his hostile intentions against the Greeks, 187. He besieges Constantinople, 210. Takes the city by storm, 232. His entry into the city, 239. Makes it his capital, 243. His death, 251.
- Mahometism*, by what means propagated, ix, 189. Toleration of Christianity under, 368.
- Majorian*, his history, character, and elevation to the western empire, vi, 157. His speech to the senate, 169. His salutary laws, 171.

- His preparations to invade Africa, 177. His fleet destroyed by Genesius, 181. His death, 183.
- Mabieria*, his character of the Normans, 2, 264.
- Mahmud Shah*, sultan of the Turks, his prosperous reign, 3, 363. Restores the eastern calendar, 366. His death, 367.
- Melius Theodorus*, the great civil humours to which he attained, iii, 54, note.
- Membres*, their origin and character, vi, 162. Their establishment in Egypt, 164.
- Mercia*, mother of the young emperor Alexander Severus, acts as regent of the empire, i, 241. Is put to death with him, 277. Her conference with Origen, ii, 449.
- Merges*, an Armenian noble, his history, ii, 141.
- Mew*, the only animal that can accommodate himself to all climates, i, 349, note.
- Miconium*, in the Roman law, explained, viii, 72.
- Mithraeum* are devoted to death, by the edict of Theodosius against heretics, v, 32.
- Muhammad*, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 63. He repulses the Normans, 2, 317. But fails in his scheme of subduing the western empire, 224. His ill treatment of the crusaders, xi, 100.
- Musomatha*, a city of Assyria, reduced and destroyed by the emperor Julian, iv, 173.
- Murdo*, the four species of, most renowned by the human, i, 284, note.
- Murcellian*, statue of the sacred largesses under the emperor Constant in Gaul, under the usurpation of Maximus, iii, 148. His embassy to Constantine, 151. Was killed in the battle of Mursa, 159.
- Murcellian*, his revolt in Dalmatia, and character, vi, 185. Joins the emperor Antemius, and expels the Vandals from Sardinia, 200. His death, 203.
- Murcellian*, one of the prefect Maximin, his treacherous murder of Gabinus king of the Quadi, iv, 328.
- Murcellus*, the centurion, martyred for desertion, ii, 464.
- Murcellus*, bishop of Rome, called to restore peace to the city, ii, 481.
- Murcellus*, bishop of Apamea in Syria, loses his life in destroying the pagan temples, v, 106, 107.
- Mercia*, the concubine of the emperor Commodus, a patroness of the Christians, ii, 442.
- Murrian*, senator of Constantinople, marries the empress Pulcheria, and is acknowledged emperor, vi, 46. His imperate refusal of the demands of Attila the Hun, 87.
- Murrianopolis*, the city of, taken by the Goths, i, 326.
- Murrianus* are subdued and punished by Marcus Antoninus, i, 281. Alliance made with, by the emperor Gallienus, 420.
- Murrian* elected bishop of the Nazarenes, ii, 279.

GENERAL INDEX.

- Marada*, battle of, between Constantine the Great and Licinius, ii, 247.
- Margus*, battle of, between Diocletian and Carinus, ii, 410.
- Margus*, bishop of, betrays his episcopal city into the hands of the Huns, ii, 51.
- Maria*, daughter of Eudamon of Carthage, her remarkable adventures, vi, 31.
- Marianus*, his account of the misfortunes of Spain, by an irruption of the barbarous nations, v, 352.
- Marius*, a valiant officer, chosen emperor by the legions of Africa, i, 385.
- Marius* the armenian, a candidate for the purple among the competitors against Gallienus, his character, i, 446.
- Mars*, bishop of Arthmus, is cruelly treated by the emperor Julian, iv, 116.
- Marmys*, engagements there between the emperor Julian, and Sapor, king of Persia, iv, 494.
- Masanius*, of the East, character and history of, viii, 351.
- Marcia*, a Roman prostitute, the mother, grandmother, and great-grandmother, of three popes, ix, 198.
- Marriage*, regulations of, by the Roman laws, viii, 57. Of Roman citizens with strangers, proscribed by their jurisprudence, x, 129.
- Martel, Charles*, duke of the Franks, his character, x, 23. His politic conduct on the Saracen invasion of France, 24, 25. Debauch the Saracens, 26. Why he was consigned over to hell-fires by the clergy, 27.
- Martin*, bishop of Tours, destroys the idols and pagan temples in Gaul, v, 194. His weakish institution there, vi, 245.
- Martina*, marries her uncle, the emperor Heraclius, ix, 9. Endeavours to share the imperial dignity with her sons, 10. Her fate, 12.
- Martinianus*, receives the title of Cæsar, from the emperor Licinius, ii, 261.
- Martyrs*, primitive, an inquiry into the true history of, ii, 361. The several inducements to martyrdom, 435. Three methods of escaping it, 440. Marks by which learned catholics distinguish the relics of the martyrs, 427, note. The worship of, and their relics introduced, v, 123.
- Mary*, Virgin, her immaculate conception, borrowed from the Koran, ix, 296.
- Maximel*, the persecuted brother of Gildas the Moor, takes refuge in the imperial court of Honorius, v, 106. Is intrusted with troops to reduce Gildas, 107. Defeats him, 170. His suspicious death, 172.
- Mass* of the officers under Constantine the Great, his functions, iii, 70.
- Maximus*, his revolt and conspiracy against the emperor Constantius, i, 144.
- Matthew*, St. his gospel originally composed in Hebrew, ii, 357, note; viii, 263, note.

- Maurice*, his birth, character, and promotion to the eastern empire, viii, 140. Resumes Charles II, king of Persia, 189. His war against the Avars, 200. State of his armies, 209. His abdication and death, 209, 210.
- Mauritania*, ancient, its situation and extent, i, 41. Character of the native Moors of, v, 15.
- Maxentius*, the son of Maximian, declared emperor at Rome, ii, 200. His tyranny in Italy and Africa, 216. The military force he had to oppose Constantine, 221. His defeat and death, 232. His politic humanity to the Christians, 451.
- Maximian*, associate in the empire with Diocletian, his character, ii, 145. Triumphs with Diocletian, 156. Holds his court at Milan, 158. Abdicates the empire along with Diocletian, 174. He resumes the purple, 200. Seduces Severus, and puts him to death, 202. His second resignation, and unfortunate end, 210, 212. His conversion to the Christians accounted for, 463.
- Maximilianus*, the African, a Christian martyr, ii, 464.
- Maximus*, his birth, fortune, and elevation to the empire of Rome, i, 271. Why deemed a persecutor of the Christians, 450.
- Maximus* is declared Cæsar, on the abdication of Diocletian, ii, 189. Obtains the rank of Augustus from Galerius, 208. His defeat and death, 232, 239. Renewed the persecution of the Christians after the toleration granted by Galerius, 467.
- Maximin* the cruel minister of the emperor Valentinian, promoted to the prefecture of Gaul, iv, 258.
- Maximus*, his embassy from Theodinus the Younger, to Attila king of the Huns, vi, 68.
- Maximus and Balbinus* elected joint emperors by the senate, on the deaths of the two Gordians, i, 250.
- Maximus*, his character and revolt in Britain, v, 8. His treaty with the emperor Theodosius, 12. Persecutes the Priscillianists, 34. His invasion of Italy, 47. His defeat and death, 52.
- Maximus*, the pagan preceptor of the emperor Julian, initiates him into the Eleusinian mysteries, iv, 76. Is honourably invited to Constantinople by his imperial pupil, 92. Is corrupted by his residence at court, 93.
- Maximus*, Perennius, his wife ravished by Valentin III, emperor of the West, vi, 140. His character and elevation to the empire, 147.
- Medobes*, the Persian general, ungratefully treated by Chosroes, vii, 301.
- Mera*, its situation and description, ix, 237. The Casha or temple of, 243. Its deliverance from Alutshah, 254. The doctrine of Mahomet opposed there, 289. His escape, 288. The city of, surrendered to Mahomet, 307. Is pillaged by Abu Tahir, x, 77.
- Medina*, reception of Mahomet there, on his flight from Mecca, ix, 290.
- Megalenia*, the festival of, at Rome, described, i, 145, note.
- Melians*, an Egyptian sect, persecuted by Athanasius, iii, 360.

- Adusus*, battle of, between the eastern emperor Theodosius and Choroas king of Persia, viii, 176.
- Adriatic*, citizen of Bark, invites the Normans into Italy, v, 239.
- Amphipolis*, its situation and reduction by the Saracens, ix, 429.
- Merovingian* kings of the Franks in Gaul, origin of, vi, 58. Their domain and benefices, 356.
- Harun*, caliph of the Saracens, and the last of the house of Omniyeh, his defeat and death, x, 31, 32.
- Atroparctania*, invasion of, by the emperor Julian, iv, 162. Described by Xenophon, 165, 164.
- Mecrula*, Valerius, the first prefect of Rome, his high character, iii, 46, note.
- Messiah*, under what character he was expected by the Jews, ii, 275. His birth-day, how fixed by the Romans, iv, 22, note.
- Mercy* and money, their operation in improving the human mind, i, 356.
- Metellus Numidicus*, the censor, his invective against women, i, 241, note.
- Metius Falcenius*, his useful speech to the emperor Trajan in the senate on his election, ii, 64.
- Metropolitan* of Cyzicus, is made patriarch of Constantinople, vii, 147.
- Metz*, cruel treatment of, by Attila king of the Huns, vi, 166.
- Michael I*, Rhungabe, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 35.
- Michael II*, the Stammerer, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 40.
- Michael III*, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 45. Is defeated by the Paulicians, x, 119.
- Michael IV*, the Paphlagonian, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 71.
- Michael V*, Calaphates, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 72.
- Michael VI*, Stratioticus, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 73.
- Michael VII*, Parapinaces, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 76.
- Milan*, how the imperial court of the western empire came to be transferred from Rome to that city, ii, 159.
- famous subject of Constantine the Great in favour of the Christians, published there, iii, 244.
- St. Ambrose elected archbishop of that city, v, 57. Tumults occasioned by his refusing a church for the Arian worship of the emperors Justin and his son, 40.
- revolt of, to Justinian, vi, 249, 245. Is taken and destroyed by the Burgundians, 250.
- is again destroyed by Frederic I, ix, 207.
- Military* force, its strength and efficacy dependent on a due proportion to the number of the people, i, 167.
- Military* officers of the Roman empire at the time of Constantine the Great, a review of, iii, 36.
- Milennium*, the doctrine of, explained, ii, 301.
- Mingrelians*. See Colchians.
- Minority*, two distinctions of, in the Roman law, v, 154, note.
- Miracles*, those of Christ and his apostles, escaped the notice of the heathen philosophers and historians, ii, 378, 379. Account of those wrought by the body of St. Stephen, v, 128.

- Miscellaneous* powers of the primitive church, an inquiry into, ii, 369.
- Mithras*, chief minister and father-in-law of the third Gordian, his character, i, 397.
- Misopogon* of the emperor Julian, on what occasion written, iv, 150.
- Miscellanea*, or great golden dish of Adolphus king of the Thurgoths, history of, v, 336.
- Muhammad* assumes the title of caliph, and makes war against Ali, ix, 338. His character and reign, 344. Lays siege to Constantinople, 349.
- Moder*, prince of the Amali, seduced by the emperor Theodosius, turns his arms against his own countrymen, iv, 432.
- Mogals*, primitive, their method of treating their conquered enemies, vi, 54. Reign and conquests of Zingis, xi, 402. Conquests of his successors, 413. See Tartars.
- Moguniarum*, the city of, surprised by the Alamanos, iv, 234.
- Mohamud* the Egyptian, his treaty with the Saracens Amrou, ix, 432.
- Monarchy* defined, i, 95. Hereditary, ridiculous in theory, but salutary in fact, 270. The peculiar objects of cruelty and of avarice under, iii, 62.
- Monastic institutions*, the seeds of, sown by the primitive Christians, ii, 323. Origin, progress, and consequence of, vi, 238.
- Money*, the standard and computation of, under Constantine the Great, and his successors, ix, 89, note.
- Monks* have embellished the sufferings of the primitive martyrs by fictions, ii, 429.
- character of, by Eusebius, x, 123, 124. By Basilian, 168. Origin and history of, vi, 230. Their industry in making proselytes, 244. Their obedience, 254. Their dress and habitations, 253. Their diet, 254. Their manual labour, 256. Their riches, 259. Their solitude, 260. Their devotion and visions, 261. Their division into the classes of Cenobites and Anachoretes, 263.
- suppression of at Constantinople, by Constantine V, ix, 190.
- Monophysites* of the East, history of the sect of, viii, 350.
- Monothelitic controversy*, account of, viii, 330.
- Montesquieu*, his description of the military government of the Roman empire, i, 310. His opinion that the degrees of freedom in a state are measured by taxation, controverted, iii, 82.
- Mortius*, questor of the palace, is sent by the emperor Constantius, with Domitian, to correct the administration of Gallus in the East, iii, 176. Is put to death there, 177.
- Mosses* of Barbary, their miserable poverty, vii, 190. Their invasion of the Roman provinces punished by Solomon the eunuch, 203.
- Mursa* is reduced by the Turks, xii, 248.
- Muristan*, Thomas, elected patriarch of Constantinople by the Venetians, xi, 396.
- Murilama*, an Arabian chief, endeavours to rival Mahomet in his prophetic character, ix, 356.

GENERAL INDEX.

- Moses*, the doctrine of the immortality of the soul first introduced in his law, ii, 299. His sanguinary laws compared with those of Mahomet, ix, 295.
- Mosheim*, character of his work, De rebus Christianis ante Constantinum, viii, 260*a* note.
- Murdomas* by Simeon besieges Constantinople, x, 10.
- Matasim*, the last caliph of the Saracens, his wars with the Greek emperor Theophilus, x, 67. Is killed by the Moguls, xi, 318.
- Maximuse* usurps the Greek empire, and destroys Isaac Angelus, and his son Alexius, xi, 525. Is driven from Constantinople by the Latins, 530. His death, 532.
- Mina*, the son of Bajazet, invested with the kingdom of Anatolia by Tamerlane, xii, 31. His reign, 39.
- Mozarabes*, in the history of Spain, explained, ix, 497.
- Municipal cities*, their advantages, i, 58.
- Muratori*, his literary character, xii, 334, note.
- Mursa*, battle of, between the emperor Constantine, and the usurper Magnentius, iii, 159.
- Mur* the Saracen, his conquest of Spain, ix, 478. His disgrace, 483. his death, 486.
- Murphy*, the supposed son of Bajazet, his story, xii, 47.
- Musa*, battle of, between the forces of the emperor Heraclius and those of Mahomet, ix, 313.
- Mydennus*, river, the course of, stopped by Sapor, king of Persia, at the siege of Nisibis, iii, 144.

N

- Narbonne* is besieged by Theodoric, and relieved by Count Litorius, vi, 95.
- Narvages*, the Persian general, his defeat by the Romans, and cruel fate, vii, 385.
- Narva*, battle of, between the emperor Claudius and the Goths, ii, 12.
- Naples* is besieged and taken by Belisarius, vii, 218. Extent of the duchy of, under the empire of the Franks, viii, 140.
- Narses*, his embassy from Sapor king of Persia to the emperor Constantine, iii, 201.
- Narzes*, king of Persia, prevails over the pretensions of his brother, Hormuz, and expels Thiodates king of Armenia, ii, 143. Overthrows Galerius, 144. Is surprised and routed by Constantine, 147. Articles of peace between him and the Romans, 153.
- Narzes*, the Persian general of the emperor Maurice, restores Chosroes II, king of Persia, viii, 189. His revolt against Phocas, and cruel death, 219.
- Narses*, the eunuch, his military promotion, and dominion with Belisarius, vi, 247. His character and expedition to Italy, 301. Battle of Tagina, 303. Takes Rome, 306. Reduces and kills Teias, the last king of the Goths, 301. Defeats the Franks and Alemanni, 325. Governs Italy in the capacity of senator, 328. His disgrace, and death, viii, 124.

- Nauticharus*, a chief of the Heruli, enters into the Roman service, and is made consul, i, 431.
- Navy* of the Roman empire described, i, 28.
- Nazareth* church at Jerusalem, account of, ii, 277.
- Nazarius*, the pagan orator, his account of miraculous appearances in the sky in favour of Constantine the Great, iii, 264.
- Nebriolar*, pretorian prefect in Gaul, is malmed and superseded, by his unflinching opposition to the troops of Julian, iv, 24.
- Negros* of Africa, evidences of their intellectual inferiority to the rest of mankind, ix, 311.
- Nectarius* is chosen archbishop of Constantinople, v, 30.
- Nennius*, his account of the arrival of the Saxons in Britain, different from that of Gildas, Bede, and Wulfing, vi, 381, note.
- Nepes*, Julius, is made emperor of the West by Leo the Great, vi, 219.
- Nepotian*, account of his revolt in Italy, iii, 142.
- Nero* persecutes the Christians as the incendiaries of Rome, ii, 403.
- Nerva*, emperor, his character; and prudent adoption of Trajan, i, 120.
- Nestorius*, archbishop of Constantinople, his character, viii, 233. His heresy concerning the incarnation, 285. His dispute with Cyril of Alexandria, 286. Is condemned, and degraded from his episcopal dignity, by the council of Ephesus, 291. Is exiled, 297. His death, 299. His opinions still retained in Persia, 339. Missions of his disciples in the East Indies, 343.
- Neters*, John count of, disastrous fate of him and his party at the battle of Nicopolis, xi, 451.
- Nice* becomes the capital residence of Sultan Soliman, v, 379. Siege of, by the first crusaders, xi, 57.
- Nicéphorus I*, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 35. His wars with the Saracens, x, 34. His death, 200.
- Nicéphorus II*, Phocas, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 62. His military enterprises, x, 36.
- Nicéphorus III*, Botaniates, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 80. Was raised to the throne by Sultan Soliman, x, 371.
- Nicetas*, senator of Constantinople, his flight on the capture of the city by the Latins, xi, 235. His brief history, 238, note. His account of the statues destroyed at Constantinople, 238.
- Nicholas*, patriarch of Constantinople, opposes the fourth marriage of the emperor Leo the philosopher, ix, 57.
- Nicholas V*, Pope, his character, vii, 194. How interested in the fall of Constantinople, 200.
- Nicomedia*, the court of Diocletian held there, and the city embellished by him, ii, 139. The church of, demolished by Diocletian, 467. His palace fired, 472.
- Nicopolis*, battle of, between Sultan Bajazet, and Sigismund king of Hungary, xi, 450.
- Nika*, the sedition of, at Constantinople, vii, 84.
- Nimrod*, battle of, between the emperor Heraclius, and the Persians, viii, 248.
- Niniva*, the city of, described, and its obstinate defence against the Persians, iii, 142. Is yielded to Sapor by treaty, iv, 213.

- Narbon*, the Persian chief, his illustrious character, and unhappy fate, x, 397.
- Nash*, his ark very convenient for resolving the difficulties of Mosiac antiquities, i, 420.
- Nephtismia*, a title invented by Constantine the Great to distinguish his nephew Himerianism, iii, 116.
- Nervius* described, i, 56.
- Normans*, their settlement in the province of Normandy in France, x, 257. Their introduction to Italy, 258. They serve in Sicily, 261. They conquer Apulia, 262. Their character, 264. Their treaty with the pope, 269.
- Novations* are exempted by Constantine the Great, in a particular edict, from the general penalties of heresy, iii, 308. Are finally persecuted by Macedonius bishop of Constantinople, 397.
- Novels of Justinian*, how formed, and their character, viii, 46.
- Nourreddin*, sultan, his exalted character, xi, 192.
- Nubia*, conversion of, to Christianity, viii, 368.
- Numerian*, the son of Carus, succeeds his father in the empire, in conjunction with his brother Carinus, ii, 97.
- Nuttidia*, its extent at different eras of the Roman history, i, 41.

O

- Oasis*, in the desert of Lybia, described, v, 382, note. Three places under this name pointed out, viii, 298, note.
- Obedience*, passive, theory and practice of the Christian doctrine of, iii, 248.
- Obelisk*, Egyptian, the purpose of their erection, iii, 104.
- Oblation* to the church, origin of, ii, 341.
- Obligations*, human, the sources of, viii, 82. Laws of the Romans respecting, 85.
- Odenathus*, the Palmyrene, his successful opposition to Sapur king of Persia, i, 440. Is associated in the empire by Gallienus, 449. Character and fate of his queen Zenobia, ii, 32.
- Odin*, the long reign of his family in Sweden, i, 352, note. His history, 356.
- Odoacer*, the last barbarian king of Italy, vi, 224. His character and reign, 232. Resigns all the Roman conquests beyond the Alps, to Euric king of the Visigoths, 238. Is reduced and killed by Theodoric the Ostrogoth, vii, 15.
- Old*, battle of, between Mahomet and Abu Sophian prince of Mecca, ix, 301.
- Ola*, princess of Ravia, her baptism, x, 239.
- Olive*, its introduction into the western world, i, 85.
- Ostetric* is raised to the western empire by Count Roderic, vi, 215.
- Olympic games* compared with the tournaments of the Goths, xi, 39.
- Olympiodorus*, his account of the magnificence of the city of Rome, v, 262. His account of the marriage of Adolphus king of the Visigoths with the princess Placidia, 264.
- Olympian*, favourite of the emperor Honorius, alarms him with unfavourable suspicions of the designs of Stilicho, v, 239. Causes

- Quintus* to be put to death, 242. His disgrace, and ignominious death, 224.
- Qamar*, caliph of the Saracens, ix, 332. His character, 359. His journey to Jerusalem, 412.
- Qamish*, elevation of the house of, to the office of caliph of the Saracens, ix, 341. Why not the objects of public favour, v, 28. Destruction of, 21.
- Quakers*, Heathens, are silenced by Constantine the Great, iii, 400.
- Quilan*, emir of the Ottomans, his reign, xi, 434. Marries the daughter of the Greek emperor Constantine, 440.
- Ordination* of the clergy in the early ages of the church, an account of, iii, 287.
- Orator* is sent ambassador from Attila king of the Huns, to the emperor Theodosius the Younger, vi, 68. His history and promotion under the western emperors, 221. His son Augustulus the last emperor of the West, 222.
- Orestes*, pretor of Egypt, is insulted by a monkish mob in Alexandria, viii, 250.
- Origen* declares the number of primitive martyrs to be very innumerable, ii, 427. His conference with the empress Maximus, 449. His memory persecuted by the emperor Julian and his clergy, xiii, 523.
- Orleans* besieged by Attila king of the Huns, and relieved by Ælius and Theodoric, vi, 109.
- Orus*, bishop of Cordova, his great influence with Constantine the Great, iii, 253. Prevails on Constantine to ratify the Nicene creed, 347. Is with difficulty permitted as to concur in deposing Athanasius, 379.
- Orsacore*, the small kingdom of, reduced by the Romans, i, 334.
- Orsin*, his poems, whether to be connected with the invasion of Caledonia by the emperor Severus, i, 309. Is said to have disputed with a Christian missionary, ii, 370, note.
- Orta*, the port of, described, v, 303.
- Othman*, caliph of the Saracens, ix, 333.
- Othman*, the father of the Ottomans, his reign, xi, 432.
- Otto I*, king of Germany, restores and appropriates the western empire; ix, 190. Claims by treaty the nomination of the pope of Rome, 193. Defeats the Turks, x, 216.
- Otto II* deposes Pope John XII, and chastises his party at Rome, ix, 202.
- Otto*, bishop of Fuldingen, his character as an historian, xi, 290, note.
- Ottomans*, origin and history of, xi, 431. They obtain an establishment in Europe, 443.
- Oued* is banished to the banks of the Danube, iii, 121.
- Oxyrinchos*, in Egypt, monkish piety of that city, vi, 243.

P

- Pacatus*, his encomium on the emperor Theodosius the Great, v, 58.
- Pederasty*, how punished by the Scythian law, viii, 100. By Justinian, 102.

- Pagan*, derivation and revolutions of the term, iii, 410, note.
- Paganism*, the ruin of, suspended by the divisions among the Christians, iii, 410. Theological system of the emperor Julian, iv, 72.
- general review of the ecclesiastical establishment and jurisdiction of, before it was subverted by Christianity, v, 52. Is renounced by the Roman senate, 100. The pagan sacrifices prohibited, 100. The temples demolished, 103. The ruin of, deplored by the sophists, 123. Pagan ceremonies revived in Christian churches, 123.
- Palaeologus*, Constantine, Greek emperor, his reign, vii, 175. Is killed in the storm of Constantinople by the Turks, 230.
- Palaeologus*, John, emperor of Constantinople, xi, 372. Marries the daughter of John Cantacuzene, 382. Takes up arms against Cantacuzene, and is reduced to flight, 395. His restoration, 396. Discord between him and his sons, 451. His treaty with Pope Innocent VI, xii, 72. His visit to Pope Urban V at Rome, 74.
- Palaeologus*, John II, Greek emperor, his reign, xii, 90. His voyage to Italy, 95.
- Palaeologus*, Manuel, associated with his father John, in the Greek empire, xi, 454. Tribute exacted from him by Sultan Bajazet, 457. His treaties with Soliman and Mahomet, the sons of Bajazet VI, xii, 54. His visits to the courts of Europe, 77. Private motives of his European negotiations explained, 88. His death, 89.
- Palaeologus*, Michael, emperor of Nice, his brief replies to the negotiations of Baldwin II, emperor of Constantinople, xi, 523. His family and character, 515. His elevation to the throne, 518. His return to Constantinople, 524. Blinds and banishes his young associate John Lascaris, 525. He is excommunicated by the patriarch Arsenius, 537. Associates his son Andronicus in the empire, 539. His union with the Latin church, 551. Instigates the revolt of Sicily, 542.
- Palamites and Banderites*, origin and nature of these distinctions in the Roman empire, iii, 60.
- Palermo* taken by Belisarius by stratagem, vii, 212.
- Palestine*, a character of, i, 59.
- Palladium* of Rome, described, v, 98, note.
- Palladius*, the priest, sent by Valentinian to Africa to inquire into the government of Count Romanus, conspires with him in oppressing the provinces, iv, 502.
- Palmyra*, description of, and its destruction by the emperor Aurelian, ii, 39.
- Panetus* was the first teacher of the Stoic philosophy at Rome, viii, 28, note.
- Pandects* of Justinian, how formed, viii, 37.
- Pandeparchus*, import of that title in the Greek empire, x, 120.
- Pannonia* described, i, 56.
- Pandemon* at Rome, by whom arrested, i, 71, note. Is converted into a Christian church, v, 107.

- Panagouzes*, Huzen, described, v, 265.
- Paper*, where and when the manufacture of, was first found out, iv, 379.
- Paraselen*, the celebrated lawyer, created physician perfect, by the emperor Zerkus, i, 291. His death, 217.
- Papirius*, Caius, reasons for concluding that he could not be the author of the Jus Papirianum, viii, 5, note.
- Paria*, proportion their number bore to that of the protestants in England, at the beginning of the last century, iii, 253, note.
- Pera*, king of Armenia, his history, iv, 316. Is treacherously killed by the Russians, 319.
- Peribolus* of Alexandria, account of, viii, 273, note.
- Perdus*, Mahomet's, described, ix, 292.
- Periz*, description of that city, under the government of Julian, iii, 276. Situation of his palace, iv, 10, note.
- Periz* subdued by Artaxerxes king of Persia, i, 349. His constitution of government similar to the feudal system of Europe, ibid. Recapitulation of the war with Rome, 331.
- Pascal II*, Pope, his trouble some pontificate, xii, 367.
- Pastoral* ministers, much better adapted to the fierceness of war, than to pastoral innocence, iv, 342.
- Paternal* authority, extent of, by the Roman law, viii, 51. Successive limitations of, 53.
- Parras*, extraordinary deliverance of, from the Sclavonians and Bulgars, i, 107.
- Patriarch*, the order of, under the Roman empire, and under the emperor, compared, iii, 29. Under the Greek empire, their rank explained, ix, 131.
- Patrick*, the nuclear saint of Ireland, derivation of his name, vi, 227, note.
- Pavia*, massacre of the friends of Stilicho there, by the instigation of Olympius, v, 240. Is taken by Alboin king of the Lombards, who fixes his residence there, viii, 128.
- Paul* of Samosata, bishop of Antioch, his character and history, ii, 434.
- Paul*, archbishop of Constantinople, his fatal contest with his competitor Maccedonius, iii, 393.
- Paula*, a Roman widow, her illustrious descent, v, 237. Was owner of the city of Nicopolis, 262. Her monastic end, vi, 243.
- Paulinians*, origin and character of, x, 168. Are persecuted by the Greek emperor, 173. They revolt, 177. They are reduced, and transported to Thrace, 181. Their present state, 184.
- Pauline*, wife of the tyrant Maximin, softens his ferocity by gentle counsels, i, 240, note.
- Paulus*, master of the offices to Theodosius the Younger, his crime, and execution, v, 424.
- Paulus*, bishop of Nola, his history, v, 326.
- Paulus*, patriarch of Aquileia, flies from the Lombards with his treasures, into the island of Grado, viii, 127.

- Paganism*, the party of, among the Roman civilians, explained, vii, 32.
- Pella*, the city of, taken by Zingis the Mogul emperor, xi, 409.
- Pelagianism*, controversy agitated by the Luthi clergy, v, 226. And in Britain, 369.
- Pella*, the church of the Nazarenes settled there on the destruction of Jerusalem, ii, 278.
- Peloponnesus*, state of, under the Greek empire, v, 105. Manufactures, 108.
- Penal laws* of Rome, the abolition and revival of, vii, 94.
- Pendragon*, his office and power in Britain, v, 369.
- Penitentials*, of the Greek and Latin churches, history of, xi, 16.
- Pepin*, king of France, unites the pope of Rome against the Lombards, ix, 148. Receives the title of king by papal sanction, 152. Grants the exarchate to the pope, 156.
- Pepin*, John, count of Minorhino, reduces the tribune Rinzzi, and restores aristocracy and church-government at Rome, xii, 335.
- Pepper*, its high estimation and price at Rome, v, 235, note.
- Perennis*, minister of the emperor Commodus, his great causticism and dissuol, i, 143.
- Periopolis*, a city of Assyria, reduced and burned by the emperor Julian, iv, 170.
- Perseus*, king of Persia, his fatal expedition against the Nephthites, vii, 136.
- Persecutions*, ten, of the primitive Christians, a review of, B, 443.
- Persians*, amount of the treasures taken from that prince, i, 256.
- Persia*, the monarchy of, restored by Artaxerxes, i, 318. The religion of the Magi reformed, ibid. Abridgment of the Persian theology, 320. Simplicity of their worship, 324. Ceremonies and moral precepts, 323. Every other mode of worship prohibited but that of Zoroaster, 328. Extent and population of the country, 330. Its military power, 342. Account of the audience given by the emperor Carus to the ambassadors of Varanes, B, 94. The throne of, disputed by the brothers Narse and Hormiz, 143. Galerius defeated by the Persians, 144. Narse overthrown in his turn by Galerius, 146. Articles of peace agreed on between the Persians and the Romans, 153.
- war between Sapor king of, and the emperor Constantine, iii, 133. Battle of Singara, 140. Sapor invades Mesopotamia, 204. The Persian territories invaded by the emperor Julian, iv, 181. Peace of the Tigris, 180. Julian harassed in his retreat, 194. Treaty of peace between Sapor and the emperor Julian, 200. Reduction of Armenia, and death of Sapor, 313, 315.
- the silk trade, how carried on from China through Persia, for the supply of the Roman empire, vii, 94. Death of Peroses, in an expedition against the white Huns, 136. Series of the reign of Cabades, and his son Choroas, 398. Amarty of, at the death of Choroas II, vii, 254. Ecclesiastical history of, 330.
- invasion of, by the caliph Almirkan, ix, 566. Battle of

- Codrus*, 365. Sack of Ctesiphon, 368. Conquest of, by the Saracens, 372. The Magian religion supplanted by Alamaelism, 424. The power of the Arabs crushed by the dynasty of the Bowides, x, 82. Persia subdued by the Turks, 344.
- Persia*, conquest of, by the Moguls, xi, 416. By Tamerlane, xii, 7.
- Perdicar*, his character and exaltation to the imperial throne, i, 157. His funeral and apothecia, 157.
- Perennius Niger*, governor of Syria, assumes the imperial dignity on the death of Pertinax, i, 178.
- Petrus*, character of his Dogmata Theologica, viii, 260, note.
- Petr*, brother of the eastern emperor Maurice, his injurious treatment of the citizens of Arimantium, and flight from thence, viii, 201.
- Peter I*, czar of Russia, his conduct toward his son, contrasted with that of Constantine the Great, iii, 112.
- Peter of Arragon*, assumes the kingdom of Sicily, xi, 844.
- Peter*, Bartholomew, his miraculous discovery of the Holy Lance, xi, 75. His strange death, 76.
- Peter of Courtenay*, emperor of Constantinople, xi, 268.
- Peter the Hermit*, his character and scheme to recover the Holy Land from the infidels, xi, 1. Leads the first crusaders, 24. Failure of his zeal, 72.
- Petra*, the city of, taken by the Persians, vii, 330. Is besieged by the Romans, 331. Is demolished, 333.
- Petrarch*, his studies and literary character, xii, 121. And history, 324. His account of the ruin of the ancient buildings of Rome, 417.
- Pfeffel*, character of his history of Germany, ix, 212, note.
- Phalaris*, Grecian, compared with the Roman legions, i, 21.
- Pharamond*, the actions, and foundation of the French monarchy by him, of doubtful authority, v, 360.
- Pharar* commands the Hevull: in the African war, under Belisarius, vii, 163. Pursues Gellimer, 189. His letter to Gellimer, 191.
- Pharisees*, account of that sect among the Jews, ii, 299.
- Pharis*, river, its course described, vii, 319.
- Phascus*, derivation of the name of that bird, vii, 321.
- Philadelphus*, Francis, his character of the Greek language of Constantinople, xii, 115.
- Philip I* of France, his limited dignity and power, xi, 8.
- Philip Augustus*, of France, engages in the third crusade, xi, 145.
- Philip*, pretorian prefect under the third Gordian, raised to the empire on his death, i, 302. Was a favourite of the Christians, ii, 431.
- Philip*, pretorian prefect of Constantinople, conveys the bishop Paul into banishment clandestinely, iii, 304.
- Philippicus*, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 29.
- Philopopolis* taken and sacked by the Goths, i, 399.
- Philo*, a character of his works, iii, 317.
- Philosophy*, Grecian, review of the various sects of, i, 48.

Plinius, the situation of his palace, iii, 3.

Plotius is settled by Gracchus, who trades in corn, xii, 52.

Plotius, a centurion, is chosen emperor by the disaffected troops of the eastern empire, viii, 206. Murders the emperor Maurice, and his children, 209. His character, 212. His fall and death, 215.

Plinius described, i, 39.

Plotius, the son of Antonina, distinguishes himself at the siege of Naples, vii, 261. Is exiled, 263. Betrays his mother's vices to Belisarius, 264. Turns monk, 267.

Plotius, the patrician, kills himself to escape the persecution of Justinian, viii, 322.

Plotius, patriarch of Constantinople, character of his Library, x, 158. His quarrel with the pope of Rome, xi, 172.

Plotius, George, the Greek historian, some account of, xii, 88, note. His embassy, 176. His fate on the taking of Constantinople by the Turks, 235.

Pompey, derivation of the name of that province, xi, 1, note.

Pigres of Africa, ancient fabulous account of, iv, 310.

Pilete, Pocinus, his testimony in favour of Jesus Christ, much improved by the primitive fathers, ii, 445.

Pilgrimage's fables, history and character of, viii, 363.

Pinnus tricina, a kind of silk manufactured from the threads spun by this fish, by the Romans, vii, 92.

Pipa, a princess of the Mercurians, espoused by the emperor Gallienus, i, 420.

Pis, Calphurnius, one of the competitors against Gallienus, his illustrious family and character, i, 447.

Pisus, the city of, destroyed by the Goths, i, 424.

Placidia, daughter of Theodosius the Great, her history and marriage with Adolphus king of the Goths, v, 334. Is injuriously treated by the murderer Singenic, after the death of her husband, 353. Her marriage with Constantine, and retreat to Constantinople, vi, 2. Her adulteration in the West, as guardian of her son the emperor Valentinian III, 8. History of her daughter Honoria, 103. Her death and burial, 128, note.

Plague, origin and nature of this disease, vii, 418. Great extent and long duration of that in the reign of Justinian, 425.

Plato, his theological system, iii, 314. Is received by the Alexandrian Jews, 315. And expounded by St. John the Evangelist, 318. The theological system of the emperor Julian, iv, 72.

Platon, philosophy introduced into Italy, xii, 131.

Platonism, now, an account of, ii, 182. Unites with the heathen priests to oppose the Christians, 452.

Plautianus, pretorian prefect under the emperor Severus, his history, i, 201.

Plautian, of Rome, state and character of, v, 278.

Pliny the Younger, examination of his conduct toward the Christians, ii, 417.

Poor laws, a ridiculous appointment, xii, 326, note.

- Paganism*, his reflections on the ruin of ancient Rome, xii, 393.
- Pointre*, battle of, between Clovis king of the Franks, and Alaric king of the Goths, vi, 335.
- Polentia*, battle of, between Stilicho the Roman general, and Alaric the Goth, v, 138.
- Polytheism* of the humans, its origin and effects, i, 46. How accounted for by the primitive Christians, ii, 228. Scrupulous of the people at the time of the publication of Christianity, 335. The Christians very more odious to the pagans than the Jews, 287.
- the ruin of, suspended by the divisions among Christians, iii, 410. Theological system of the emperor Julian, iv, 72.
- review of the pagan ecclesiastical establishment, v, 192. Revival of, by the Christian monks, 190.
- Porphyrius*, prefect of Rome, proposes to drive Alaric from the walls by spells, v, 292.
- Porphyrius Ruricius*, general under Maximian, defeated and killed by Constantine the Great, ii, 227.
- Porphyry*, his discretionary exercise of power during his command in the East, i, 100. Increase of the tributes of Asia by his conquests, 237.
- Pottgi*, pagan, their jurisdiction, v, 92.
- Pontifex Maximus*, in pagan Rome, by whom that office was exercised, iii, 281.
- Popes* of Rome, the growth of their power, ii, 181. Revolt of, from the Greek emperors, 137. Origin of their temporal domination, 153. Publication of the decretals, and of the fictitious donation of Constantine the Great, 159. Authority of the German emperors in their election, 193. Violent distractions in their election, 167.
- foundation of their authority at Rome, xii, 260. Their mode of election revised, 293. Schism in the papacy, 307. They acquire the absolute dominion of Rome 387. The ecclesiastical government, 391.
- Population* of Rome, a computation of, v, 296.
- Porcius, Strophus*, his conspiracy at Rome, xii, 363.
- Posthumus*, the Roman general under the emperor Gallienus, defeats Gaul against the incursions of the Franks, i, 414. Is killed by his mutinous troops, ii, 229.
- Power*, absolute, its exercise of, how checked, x, 133.
- Prefect* of the sacred bed-chamber, under Constantine the Great, his office, iii, 316.
- Prefects* of Rome and Constantinople, under the emperors, the nature of their offices, 35, 43. The office revived at Rome, xii, 282.
- Pretextatus*, prefect of Rome under Valentinian, his character, iv, 275.
- Pretorian* bands in the Roman army, on account of, i, 168. They sell the empire of Rome by public auction, 171. Are disgraced by the emperor Severus, 186. A new establishment of them, 189. Authority of the pretorian prefects, 200. Are reduced;

- their privileges abolished, and their place supplied, by the Jo- vian and Herculeus, ii, 161. Their desperate courage under Marcian, 252. Are finally suppressed by Constantine the Great, 257.
- Petrarian* prefect, revivals of this office under the emperors, iii,
 42. Their functions when it became a civil office, 44.
- Prætor* of Rome, the nature and tendency of their office explained, vii, 13.
- Prætorius*, a form of Scythian unknown in the temples of paganism, iii, 301. Use and abuse of, 302.
- Prætorian*, influence of the doctrine of, on the Saracens and Turks, i, 298.
- Prætorius*, among the primitive Christians, the office explained, ii, 131.
- Prætor Jahn*, origin of the romantic stories concerning, viii, 244.
- Prætor*, no distinct order of men among the ancient pagans, ii, 254.
 iii, 281.
- Prætorius*, Dr. the ultimate tendency of his opinions pointed out, i, 123, see.
- Prætorianus*, the prerogative of, unknown in the Roman law, vii, 75.
- Prætor* of the waters in Peria, his office, vii, 503, see.
- Prætorian*, bishop of Avila in Spain, i, with his followers, put to death for heresy, v, 34.
- Prætor*, the historian, his conversation with a captive Greek, in the camp of Attila, vi, 59. His character, 67, see.
- Prætor*, the Greek general, his successes against the Avars, viii, 203.
- Prætor*, widow of the prefect Petrus, her flight from the sack of Rome by Alaric, v, 321.
- Prætor* assumes the imperial dignity in opposition to Flavianus, ii, 70.
 His character and history, 72.
- Prætor*, pretorian prefect of Myricum, preserves Sirius from the Quadi, iv, 330.
- Prætor*, Germanus, his embassy from the emperor Diocletian to Narces king of Peria, ii, 131.
- Prætor*, John of, instigates the revolt of Sirius from John of Angou, xi, 344.
- Prætor*, story of his extraordinary brazen mirror, vii, 113.
- Prætor*, the Platonic philosopher of Athens, his superstition, vii, 149.
- Prætorius* of Asia, Arabia, and Africa, their office, iii, 48.
- Prætorius*, wife of the Greek emperor Michael I, her marital inclination, iv, 36.
- Prætorius*, his history and revolt against Valens emperor of the East, iv, 243. Is reduced, and put to death, 250. His account of the testament of the emperor Ascalius, v, 412. His account of Bel- tain, vi, 401. Character of his history, vii, 61. Assumes the office of secretary under Belisarius, 162. His defence of the Roman archers, 163. His account of the desolation of the African province by war, 363.

- Proculus*, origin of the sect of, in the Roman civil law, viii, 80.
Proculus, his extraordinary character, and his rebellion against Probus in Gaul, ii, 87.
Prodigies in ancient history, a philosophical resolution of, iii, 263.
Proculus, under what circumstances the Roman law enforced the fulfilment of, viii, 83.
Proculus, master-general of the infantry under Theodosius, is ruined by the enmity of Rufinus, v, 140.
Property, personal, the origin of, viii, 70. How ascertained by the Roman laws, 71. Testamentary dispositions of, how introduced, 77.
Prophets, their office among the primitive Christians, ii, 330.
Propolis described, iii, 8.
Proterius, patriarch of Alexandria, his martial episcopacy, and violent death, viii, 310.
Protestants, their resistance of oppression, not consistent with the practice of the primitive Christians, iii, 249. Proportion of their number to that of the catholics, in France, at the beginning of the last century, 253, note. Estimate of their reformation of popery, x, 188.
Protospathar, import of that title in the Greek empire, x, 120.
Proverbs, the book of, why not likely to be the production of King Solomon, vii, 195, note.
Provinces of the Roman empire described, i, 30. Distinction between Latin and Greek provinces, 60. Account of the tributes received from, 237. Their number and government after the seat of empire was removed to Constantinople, iii, 50.
Prætor, compared of, by the Ottomans, xi, 434.
Prætor, migration of the Goths to, i, 392.
Prætorina, sister of the emperor Theodosius the Younger, her character and administration, v, 416. Her lessons to her brother, 419. Her contests with the empress Eudocia, 424. Is proclaimed empress of the East, on the death of Theodosius, vi, 84. Her death and canonization, 190.
Purple, the royal colour of, among the ancients, far surpassed by the modern discovery of cochineal, vii, 90, note.
- Q
- Quadi*, the invasions of, punished by the emperor Constantine, iii, 106. Revenge the Atrebatian murder of their king Culinus, iv, 330.
Quæstus, criminal, how exercised under the Roman emperors, iii, 79.
Quæstor, historical review of this office, iii, 71.
Quintilian brothers, Maximus and Condiatus, their history, i, 142.
Quintilian, brother of the emperor Claudius, his ineffectual effort to succeed him, ii, 15.
Quintus Curtius, an attempt to decide the age in which he lived, i, 306, note.
Quintus, the effect of that word when applied to soldiers, i, 252, note.

- Hastings*, king of the Goths, his formidable invasion of Italy, v, 213. His savage character, 217. Is subdued by Siliolus, and put to death, 220.
- Hader*, king of the Varni, compelled to fulfil his matrimonial obligations, by a British heroine, vi, 402.
- Hemlock*, the manner of, how observed by the Turks, ix, 475.
- Hende*, a chieftain of the Alemani, his unprovoked attack of Moguntium, iv, 281.
- Herenna*, the ancient city of, described, v, 207. The emperor Maximian fixes his residence there, 210. Invasion of, by a Greek fleet, ix, 140. Is taken by the Lombards, and recovered by the Venetians, 146. Final conquest of, by the Lombards, 147. The exarchate of, bestowed by Pepin on the pope, 156.
- Hermanud of Thoulous*, the crusader, his character, xi, 33. His route to Constantinople, 43. His bold behaviour there, 51.
- Hersand*, count of Tripoli, betrays Jerusalem into the hands of Saladin, xi, 135.
- Haynal*, Abbe, mistaken in asserting that Constantine the Great suppressed pagan worship, iii, 404.
- Hobels*, who the most inveterate of, x, 177.
- Heraclius*, the first catholic king of Spain, converts his Gothic subjects, vi, 209.
- Reformation from popery*, the amount of, estimated, x, 198. A recent reformation still working in the reformed churches, 192.
- Rein-deer*, this animal driven northward by the improvement of climate from cultivation, i, 347.
- Relics*, the worship of, introduced by the monks, v, 124. A valuable cargo of, imported from Constantinople by Louis IX of France, xi, 280.
- Remigius*, bishop of Rheims, converts Clovis king of the Franks, vi, 219.
- Repentance*, his high esteem, and extensive operation, among the primitive Christians, ii, 316.
- Resurrection*, general, the Mahometan doctrine of, ix, 277.
- Retiarius*, the mode of his combat with the secutor, in the Roman amphitheatre, i, 154.
- Reveries of the primitive church*, how distributed, ii, 345; iii, 294. Of the Roman empire, when removed to Constantinople, a review of, iii, 62.
- Rhaetum*, city of, its situation, iii, 11.
- Rhetia* described, i, 35.
- Rhasanes*, the Persian general, defeated and killed by the emperor Heraclius, viii, 349.
- Rhetoric*, the study of, congenial to a popular state, vii, 144.
- River*, the banks of, sacrificed by the emperor Valentinian, iv, 283.
- Roderic*, account of the colonies of, ix, 423. The knights of, xi, 438.
- Richard I*, of England, engaged in the third crusade, xi, 145. He

- views the island of Cyprus on the house of Lusignan, 183. His reply to the exhortations of bulk of Nully, 188.
- Richard*, monk of Gloucester, his literary character, v, 203, note.
- Richer*, Count, in history, vi, 163. Permits Majorian to assume the imperial dignity in the western empire, 169. Enjoys supreme power under cover of the name of the emperor Libius Severus, 183. Marries the daughter of the emperor Anthemius, 195. Sells Rome, and Lib. Anthemius, 217. His death, 218.
- Ricard*, Nicholas de, his birth, character, and history, xii, 831.
- Roche*, Roman, the construction and great extent of, i, 81.
- Robert* of Courtenay, emperor of Constantinople, xi, 270.
- Robert*, count of Flanders, his character and engagement in the first crusade, xi, 32.
- Robert*, duke of Normandy, his character and engagement in the first crusade, xi, 32. Retained by the measures of the church, 71.
- Roderic*, the Gothic king of Spain, his defeat and death by Tarik the Arab, ix, 473.
- Rodericus*, probable origin of his character, in Rome's Royal Convent, vi, 402, 403, note.
- Roger*, count of Sicily, his exploits, and conquest of that island, x, 281.
- Roger*, son of the father, the first king of Sicily, x, 306. His military achievements in Africa and Greece, 311.
- Roger de Flor*, engaged as an auxiliary in the service of the Greek emperor Andronicus, xi, 317. His assassination, 330.
- Romanus I.* Lecapenus, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 58.
- Romanus II.* emperor of Constantinople, ix, 61.
- Romanus III.* Alexius, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 62.
- Romanus IV.* Diogenes, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 78. Is deposed and taken prisoner by the Turkish sultan Alp Arslan, 855. His treatment, deliverance, and death, 563.
- Romanus*, Count, governor of Africa, his corrupt administration, iv, 301.
- Romanus*, governor of Boez, betrays it to the Saracens, ix, 384, 385.
- Rome*, the three periods of its decline pointed out, i, Preface. Its prosperous circumstances in the second century, 1. The principal conquests of, achieved under the republic, 2. Conquests under the emperors, 3. Military establishment of the emperors, 11. Naval force of the empire, 25. View of the provinces of the empire, 30. Its general extent, 41. The union and internal property of the empire, in the age of the Antonines, accounted for, 45. Treatment of the provinces, 50. Benefits included in the freedom of the city, 59. Distinction between the Latin and Greek provinces, 60. Prevalence of the Greek, as a scientific language, 63. Numbers and condition of the Roman slaves, 67. Population of the empire, 68. Unity and power of the government, 69. Monuments of Roman architecture, 70. The Roman magnificence chiefly displayed in public buildings, 75. Principal cities in the empire, 77. Public roads, 81. Great improvements of agriculture in the western countries of the empire, 84. Arts of husbandry, 87. Commerce with the East, 88. Contemporary representation of the prosperity of the empire, 90. Decline of courage and genius, 91. 92. Review of public affairs after the battle of Actium, 93. The imperial power and dignity conferred on Augustus by the senate, 98. The various characters and powers vested in the emperor, 103. General idea of the imperial system, 109. Abortive attempt of the senate to recover its rights after the murder of Caligula, 115. The emperors associate their intended successors to power, 119. The most happy period in the Roman history pointed out, 126. Their peculiar misery under their tyrants, 129. The empire publicly sold by auction by the pretorian guards, 171. Civil wars of the Romans, how generally decided, 192. When the army first received regular pay, 234. How the citizens were relieved from taxation, 364. General estimate of the Roman revenue from the provinces, 390. Miseries flowing from the succession to the empire being elective, 371. A summary review of the Roman history, 313. Recapitulation of the war with Persia, 331. Invasion of the provinces by the Goths, 397. The office of censor revived by the emperor Decius, 400. Peace purchased of the Goths, 406. The emperor Valerian taken prisoner by Sapor, king of Persia, 436. The popular concert of the thirty tyrants of Rome investigated, 444. Famine and pestilence throughout the empire, 455. The city tormented again: the insults of the Alemanni, &c., 47. Remarks on the alleged sedition of the officers of the militia under Aurelian, 50. Observations on the peaceful interregnum after the death of Aurelian, 56. Colony of barbarians introduced into the provinces by Probus, 82. Exhibition of the public games by Crispus, 100. Treaty of peace between the Persians and the Romans, 134. The last triumph celebrated at Rome, 153. How the imperial court came to be transferred to Milan and Nicomedia, 158. The pretorian bands superseded by the Jovian and Herculian guards, 161. The power of the senate annihilated, 162. Four divisions of the empire under four conjunct princes, 168. Their expensive establishments call for more inordinant taxes, 169. Diocletian and Maximian abdicate the empire, 170. Six emperors existing at one time, 208. The senate and people apply to Constantine to deliver them from the tyranny of Maximian, 220. Constantine enters the city victorious, 233. Laws of Constantine, 250. Constantine remains sole emperor, 264. History of the progress and establishment of Christianity, 265. Persecutions of the bishop of Rome, whence deduced, 339. State of the church at Rome at the time of the persecution by Nero, 361. Narrative of the fire of Rome, in the reign of Nero, 403. The Christians persecuted at the incensation, 405. The memorable effects of Diocletian and his associates against the Christians, 409.

Y. See account of the building and establishment of the dual city of Constantinople, in, 4. New forms of administration established there, 30. Division of the empire among the sons of Constantine, 133. Establishment of Christianity as the national religion, 283. Tumults excited by the rival bishops, Liberius and Felix, 330. Paganists restored by Julian, iv, 84. And Christianity by Jovian, 227. The empire divided into the East and West, by the emperor Valentinian, 212. Civil inhumanities of Valentinian, 259. The crafty services of the clergy restrained by Valentinian, 270. Bloody contest of Damasus and Ursinus for the bishopric of Rome, 274. Great earthquake, 338.

Rome, the emperor Theodosius visits the city, v, 35. Inquiry into the cause of the corruption of morals in his reign, 87. Review of the pagan establishment, 92. The pagan religion terminated by the senate, 100. Sacrifices prohibited, 103. The pagan religion prohibited, 116. Triumph of Honorius and Stilicho over Alaric the Goth, 204. Alaric encamps under the walls of the city, 253. Retrospect of the state of the city when besieged by Hannibal, ibid. Wealth of the nobles and magnificence of the city, 262. Character of the nobles of, by Ammianns Marcellinus, 267. State and character of the common people, 278. Public distributions of bread, Sec. 280. Public baths, 282. Games and spectacles, 284. Attempts to ascertain the population of the city, 286. The citizens suffer by famine, 290. Plague, 292. The retreat of Alaric purchased by a ransom, 295. Is again besieged by Alaric, 303. The senate unites with him in electing Attalus emperor, 305. The city seized by Alaric, and plundered, 311. Comparison between this event and the sack of Rome by the emperor Charles V, 322. Alaric quits Rome and ravages Italy, 325. Laws passed for the relief of Rome, and Italy, 357. Triumph of Honorius for the reduction of Spain by Wallia, 358. Is preserved from the hands of Attila by a ransom, vi, 131. Indications of the ruin of the empire, at the death of Valentinian III, 142. Sack of the city by Genseric king of the Vandals, 151. The public buildings of, protected from depredation by the laws of Majorian, 174. Is sacked again by the patrician Ricimer, 217. Augustulus, the last emperor of the West, 222. The decay of the Roman spirit remarked, 231. History of monastic institutions in, 244. General observations on the history of the Roman empire, 405.

— Italy conquered by Theodoric the Ostrogoth, vii, 13. Prosperity of the city under his government, 29. Account of the four factions in the circus, 76. First introduction of silk among the Romans, 91. The office of censor suppressed by Justinian, 152. The city receives Belisarius, 334. Siege of, by the Goths, ibid. Miserable siege of, by Totila the Goth, 362. Is taken, 365. Is recovered by Belisarius, 370. Is again taken by Totila, 376. Is taken by the emperor Narces, 388. Extinction of the senate, 383. The city degraded to the second rank under the emperor of Ravenna, 400. A review of the Roman laws, viii, 1. Extent of the duchy of, under the emperor of Ravenna, 146. Miscellaneous state of the city, 158. Possession of Gregory the Great, 164.

deare, the government of the city now-modelled under the pope, after their revolt from the Greek emperors, ix, 142. Is attacked by the Lombards, and delivered by King Pepin, 148. The office and rank of exarch and patrician explained, 153. Reception of Charlemagne by Pope Adrian I, 154, 155. Origin of the temporal power of the popes, 156. Mode of electing a pope, 195. Is attacked by the Saracens, x, 61. Prosperous pontificate of Leo IV, 64. Is besieged and taken by the emperor Henry III, 202. Great part of the city burnt by Robert Guiscard, in the time of Pope Gregory VII, 204.

— the history of, resumed, after the capture of Constantinople by the Turks, xii, 253. French and German emperors of, 253. Authority of the popes, 269. Restoration of the republican form of government, 277. Office of senator, 285. Wars against the neighbouring cities, 297. Institution of the jubilee, 310. Revolution in the city, by the tribune Rienzi, 391. Calamities flowing from the schemes of the papacy, 369. Statutes and government of the city, 380. Pazzi's conspiracy, 383. The ecclesiastical government of, 391. Reflections of Poggius on the ruin of the city, 395. Four principal causes of its ruin specified, 400. The Coliseum of Titus, 418. Restoration and ornaments of the city, 428.

Remilda, the betrayer of Frécul to the Avars, her cruel treatment by them, viii, 227.

Réamond, daughter of Cunimund king of the Gepids, her marriage with Alboin king of the Lombards, xii, 119. Commits his murder, 120. Her flight and death, 131.

Rase, the Sejekian kingdom of, named, x, 372.

Rudbeck, Olaf, summary abridgment of the argument in his Atlantica, i, 351.

Rufius, the confidential minister of the emperor Theodosius the Great, stimulates his cruelty against the Arians, v, 65. His character and administration, 136. His death, 157, 158.

Rugdes the Hun, his settlements in Hungary, vi, 38.

Runic characters, the antiquity of, traced, i, 363, note.

Russia, origin of the monarchy of, x, 219. Geography and trade of, 223. Naval expeditions of the Russians against Constantinople, 228. Reign of the czar Swatolux, 232. The Russians converted to Christianity, 258. Is conquered by the Moguls, vi, 420.

Sattus, a Persian nobleman, a saying of his, expressive of the danger of living under despots, i, 120.

Saulius, his character of the monks of Capua, v, 167, 168.

S

Sabellius the heresiarch, his opinions afterward adopted by his antagonist, iii, 237. His doctrine of the Trinity, 331. The Sabellians unite with the Trinitarians at the council of Nice in opposition to the Arians, 334.

Sabians, their astronomical mythology, ix, 242.

- Salomon* obtains the command of the eastern provinces from Constantine, iii, 211.
- Salusina*, general of the East, is defeated by Theodoric the Ostrogoth, king of Italy, vii, 54.
- Salutians*, origin of the sect of, in the Roman civil law, viii, 90.
- Sallustiana*, account of that sect among the Jews, B, 299.
- Saladin*, his birth, promotion, and character, xi, 169. Conquers the kingdom of Jerusalem, 190. His intellectual siege of Tyre, 140. Siege of Acre, 142. His negotiations with Richard I of England, 149. His death, 151.
- Salerno*, account of the medical school of, x, 278.
- Salle laws*, history of, vi, 343.
- Salust*, the perfect, and friend of the emperor Julian, declines the offer of the diadem on his death, iv, 204. Declines it again on the death of Jovian, 235. Is retained in his employment by the emperor Valentinian, 241.
- Sallust*, the historian, by what funds he raised his palace on the Quirinal hill, v, 318; note.
- Salus*, the retreat of the emperor Diocletian, described, ii, 177.
- Salman*, his account of the distress and rebellion of the Bagauda, vi, 144; note.
- Samanides*, the Sasanian dynasty of, x, 81.
- Samaritans*, persecution and extinction of, by the emperor Justinian, vii, 323.
- Samsel* the prophet, his ashes conveyed to Constantinople, x, 126; 126.
- Sapor*, king of Persia, procures the assassination of Chetres king of Armenia, and seizes the country, i, 435. Defeats the emperor Valerian, and takes him prisoner, 436. Sets up Cyrindes as successor to Valerian in the Roman empire, 437. Overruns Syria, Cilicia, and Cappadocia, 438. His death, ii, 41.
- Sapor*, the son of Hormuzd, is crowned king of Persia before his birth, iii, 185. His character and early heroism, 196. Harasses the eastern provinces of the Roman empire, 199. Battle of Singara, against the emperor Constantine, 140. His son brutally killed by Constantine, 142. His several attempts on Ninus, ibid. Concludes a truce with Constantine, 145. His haughty propositions to Constantine, 241. Invades Mesopotamia, 204. Reduces Amida, 208. Returns home, 210. His powerful overtures to the emperor Julian, iv, 143. His contumacious at the success of Julian, 186. Harasses the retreat of the Romans, 194. His treaty with the emperor Jovian, 209. His reduction of Armenia, and death, 211, 215.
- Saraceni*, various definitions of that appellation, ix, 233; note.
- Saraceni*, incursions of the caliphs of, ix, 382. Their rapid conquests, 361. Conquest of Persia, 372. Siege of Damascus, 385. Battle of Yermak, and conquest of Syria, 406. Of Egypt, 425. Invasions of Africa, 446. Their military character, x, 144.
- Sardar*, the Persian general, joins the Avars in besieging Constantinople, viii, 243. Revolts to the emperor Heraclius, 247.

- Sarmis*, expulsion of the Vandals from, by Marcellinus, vi, 230. Is conquered by Zeno, the brother of Gelimor king of the Vandals, vii, 181. Is surrendered to Belisarius, 186.
- Sarmatians*, irremediable defeat of, by the emperor Constantine, ii, 25. Their numbers described, iii, 115. Brief history of, 192. They apply to Constantine the Great for assistance against the Goths, 125. Are expelled their country by the Hunnians, 126. Are restored by Constantine, 200.
- Savage manners*, a brief view of, i, 356. Are more uniform than those of civilized nations, iii, 341.
- Sava*, the Goth, plunders the camp of Belisarius, and drives him into the hands of the emperor at Ravenna, v, 242. Insults Ataric, and occasions the sacking of Rome, 310. Is killed by Asolphus king of the Visigoths, 348, 349.
- Saxons*, one of the competitors for empire against Gelimer, his observation on his investiture, i, 443.
- Saxons*, lieutenant under the emperor Probus, in the East, is driven into rebellion by his troops, ii, 66.
- Saxons*, ancient, an account of, vi, 286. Their poetical considerations, 288. Their invocation of God checked by the Romans, 290. How converted to Christianity, vi, 272. Descent of the Saxons on Britain, 381. Their brutal devastation of the country, 392.
- Sauderdeg*, prince of Altania, his history, xii, 168.
- Savimas* law of the Huns, account of, viii, 100.
- Scaer*, the patrician family of, how reduced under the emperor, iii, 40, note.
- Schism* in religion, the origin of, traced, ii, 234.
- Schism* reducible to four classes, x, 45.
- Sclavonians*, their national character, vii, 278. Their barbarous incursions on the eastern empire, 282. Of Dalmatia, persons of, x, 156.
- Scoti and Picts*, the names of, how mingled, ix, 227, 228. Incursion of Britain by, 291.
- Scythians*, the name vaguely applied to mixed tribes of barbarians, i, 432. Their pastoral manners, iv, 341. Extent and boundaries of Scythia, 353. Revolution of, v, 210. Their mode of war, vi, 53.
- Schastis*, master-general of the infantry under the emperor Valens, his successful expedition against the Goths, ix, 405. Is killed in the battle of Hadrianople, 411.
- Schism*, the husband of the quæstor Iovinus, is associated with him in his second imperial dignity, v, 348.
- Schismatics*, import of that title in the Greek empire, x, 119.
- Seu*, in Normandy, the bishop and chapter of, all converted, xii, 205, note.
- Separes*, the prince of, support their independency obstinately against Ataxarx, i, 300, note.
- Sigard*, emperor of Abyssinia, is with his whole court converted by the Jews, xiii, 373.

- Selden*, his contentious character of transubstantiation, ix, 112, note.
- Selenus*, the great city of, ruined by the Romans, i, 838.
- Selenus Noster*, number of cities founded by him, i, 329, note.
- Selvet*, Turkish dynasty of the house of, x, 314. Division of their empire, 318.
- Senate of Rome is restored* by Augustus, i, 97. Its legislative and judicial powers, 109. Abusive attempt of, to resume its rights after the murder of Caligula, 116. Its legal jurisdiction over the emperor, 169. Is subjected to military despotism, by Severus, 201. Women excluded from this assembly by a solemn law, 242. The form of a senate meeting, 287. Measures taken to support the authority of the two Gordians, 292. The senate elect Maximus and Balbinus emperor on the death of the Gordians, 296. They drive the Alemanni out of Italy, 418. The senators forbid to exercise military employments by Gallienus, 419. Elect Tacitus, the father of the senate, emperor, ii, 63. Privileges gained to the senate, by this election, 65. Their power and authority annihilated by Diocletian, 160.
- account of the currency gold, or annuaries free gift of, to the emperor, iii, 96. The claim of Julian to the empire admitted, iv, 31.
- petition of, to the emperor, for the restoration of the altar of victory, v, 96. The pagan religion renounced, 100. Debates of, on the proposal of Alaric the Goth, 235. General assembly of the west, 257. Passes a decree for putting to death Serena the widow of Stilicho, 290. Under the influence of Alaric, elects Attalus emperor, 303. Trial of Arvadus, a praetorian prefect of Gaul, vi, 208. Surrenders the sovereign power of Italy to the emperor of the East, 277.
- estimation of that illustrious assembly, vii, 369.
- restoration of, in the twelfth century, xii, 277. The assembly resolved into single magistrates, 235.
- Serpens*, his lamentation for the loss of a personified deity, viii, 269.
- Servais*, history of his worship, and of his temple at Alexandria, v, 119. The temple destroyed, 111.
- Serena*, niece of the emperor Theodosius, married to his general Stilicho, v, 152. Is finally strangled by order of the Roman senate, 256.
- Servius*, legal and military import of that term, xi, 211, note.
- Severus Septimius*, general of the Pannonian legions, assumes the purple on the death of Pertinax, i, 181. His conduct toward the Christians, ii, 447.
- Severus*, he encourages Odenatius to resume the dominion of Italy, vi, 223. His body, how disposed of, 231, note.
- Severus* is declared Censor on the abdication of Diocletian and Maximian, ii, 129. His descent and death, 232.
- Severus* is appointed general of the cavalry in Gaul under Julian, vii, 320.

- Shepherds and warriors, their respective modes of life compared, iv, 342, 343.*
- Siberia, a set of Mahomedans, their distinction from the Samaites, xi, 334.*
- Siberia, extreme coldness of the climate, and miserable state of the natives at, iv, 329. Is seized and occupied by the Tartars, xi, 421.*
- Sicily, reflections on the distractions in that island, i, 151. Is conquered by the Saracens, x, 39. Introduction of the silk manufacture there, 110. Exploits of the Normans there, 260. Is conquered by Count Roger, 281. Roger, son of the former, made king of, 308. Reign of William the Bad, 324. Reign of William the Good, 326. Conquest of, by the emperor Henry VI, 329. Is subdued by Charles of Anjou, xi, 339. The Sicilian Vespers, 344.*
- Silvanus Gallinarius, the poet, his humorous treatment of the capitulations, vi, 90. His character of Theodoric king of the Visigoths in Gaul, vi, 158. His panegyric on the emperor Avitus, 164. His panegyric on the emperor Anthemius, 195.*
- Sigismund, king of the Burgundians, murders his son, and is canonized, vi, 328. Is overwhelmed by an army of Franks, 329.*
- Silvanus, Paul, his account of the various species of worms and murels employed in the church of St. Sophia at Constantinople, vii, 140, note.*
- Silk, first manufactured in China, and then in the small Grecian island of Cos, vii, 90. A peculiar kind of silk procured from the penna marina, 92. The silk-worm, first introduced to Greece, 97. Progress of the manufacture of, in the tenth century, x, 110.*
- Simeon, persecutor of the Paulicians, becomes a proselyte to their opinions, x, 173.*
- Simeon, king of Bulgaria, his exploits, x, 200.*
- Simeon Stylites, the hermit, his extraordinary mode of life, xi, 235.*
- Simeon, an early instance of, li, 153, note.*
- Simplicius, one of the last surviving pagan philosophers of Athens, his writings, and character, vii, 151, 152.*
- Singara, battle of, between the emperor Constantine and Sapor king of Persia, iii, 140. The city of, reduced by Sapor, 210. Is yielded to him by Jovian, iv, 211.*
- Sisagastes, brother of Sapor, is made king of the Goths, v, 254.*
- Sing-Sagan is perfidiously taken by Hagan chagan of the Avars, viii, 157.*
- Sisaurum is perfidiously taken by Hagan chagan of the Avars, viii, 157.*
- Sisaces despoils and murders his father Chosroes II, king of Persia, viii, 253. His treaty of peace with the emperor Heraclius, 266.*
- Sisacur, a Gothic king of Spain, persecutes the Jews there, vi, 303.*
- Sivus V. Poca, character of his administration, xii, 392.*

- Saga*, strange preservation of the original sense of that appellation, v, 197.
- Saguntum*, among the Romans, who, and their condition described, i, 111.
- Saguntum*, prison, imposed on captives by the barbarous nations, vi, 239.
- Saguntum*, town, narrative of the legendary tale of, vi, 32.
- Saguntum*, capture of, by Tannusian, vi, 29.
- Saguntum*, philologist, vi, 117.
- Saguntum*, the Saguntum dynasty of, vi, 80.
- Saguntum*, Roman, their obligations and discipline, i, 18. When they first received regular pay, 256.
- Saguntum*, Salomon, conquers Achaia Minor, i, 371. Fixes his residence at Nice, 373. Nice taken by the first crusaders, xi, 58. Battle of Dorylaeum, 60.
- Saguntum*, the son of Bajazet, his character, xi, 49. His alliance with the Greek emperor Manuel Palaeologus, 54.
- Saguntum*, king of the Jews, not the author of the book which bears the name of his Wisdome, iii, 316. Reasons for supposing he did not write either the book of Ecclesiastes or the Proverbs, iii, 193, 200.
- Saguntum*, the council, relieves the Roman province in Africa from the depredations of the Moors, iii, 200. Revolt of his troops at Carthage, 241. Is defeated and killed by Antioch the Moor, 242.
- Saguntum*, caliph of the Saracens, undertakes the siege of Constantinople, x, 8. His enormous appetite, and death, 11.
- Saguntum*, in the Mahometan religion, their tenets, ix, 253.
- Saguntum*, a Syrian philosopher, beloved by Constantine the Great, on a charge of Enslaving the mind by magic, iii, 364, note.
- Saguntum*, the widow of Justin II, her conspiracy against the emperor Tiberius, viii, 137.
- Saguntum*, St. foundation of the church of, at Constantinople, vii, 116. Its description, 118. Is converted into a mosque, xi, 230.
- Saguntum*, the Arab, commands the first siege of Constantinople, x, 1.
- Saguntum*, a Roman matron, kills herself to escape the violence of Maximian, ii, 217, note.
- Saguntum*, a mode of Christian divination, extracted from the pagans, vi, 233, note.
- Saguntum*, various opinions of the ancient philosophers as to the immortality of, ii, 204. This doctrine more generally received among the numerous nations, and for what reason, 208. Was not taught by Moses, ibid. Four different prevailing doctrines as to the origin of, viii, 263, note.
- Saguntum*, destroyed by the Greek emperor Theophilus, i, 67.
- Saguntum*, the province of, described, i, 80. Great revenues raised from this province by the Romans, 252. Is ravaged by the Franks, 215.

- Spain*, review of the history of, v, 350. Is invaded by the barbarous nations, 362. The invaders conquered by Wamba king of the Goths, 367. Successes of the Vandals there, vi, 12. Expedition of Theodoric king of the Visigoths into, 161. The Christian religion received there, 296. Herod and martyrdom of Hermenegild, 297, 298. Persecution of the Jews in, 302. Legislative assemblies of, 375.
- acquisitions of Justinian there, vii, 203.
- state of, under the emperor Charlemagne, ix, 181. First introduction of the Arabs into the country, 167. Defeat and death of Roderic the Gothic king of, 174. Conquest of, by Musa, 178. Its prosperity under the Saracens, 180. The Christian faith there, supplanted by that of Mahomet, 357. The doom of Cordova filled by Abdalahman, 361.
- Stadium*, Olympic, the races of, compared with those in the Roman circus, vii, 75.
- Stauracius*, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 35.
- Stephen*, a freedman of Domitian, assassinates the emperor Domitian, ii, 416.
- Stephen*, count of Chartres, his character, and engagement in the first crusade, xi, 52. Desires his standard, 72.
- Stephen*, St. the first Christian martyr, miraculous discovery of his body, and the minutes worked by it, v, 128.
- Stephen* the savage, sent by the Greek emperor Justinian II to exterminate the Chersonites, ix, 28.
- Stephen III*, Pope, solicits the aid of Pepin king of France, against the Lombards, under the character of St. Peter, ix, 46. Crown King Pepin, 152.
- Strabo*, the great general of the western empire under the emperor Honorius, his character, v, 150. Put to death Rufus the tyrannical prefect of the East, 157. His expedition against Alaric in Greece, 184. His diligent endeavor to check his progress in Italy, 194. Defeats Alaric at Pollentia, 199. Drives him out of Italy, 201. His triumph at Rome, 204. His preparations to oppose the invasion of Radagaisus, 215. Reduces and puts him to death, 220. Supports the claim of Alaric in the Roman senate, 226. Is put to death at Ravenna, 243. His memory persecuted, 254.
- Strabo* heads the revolted troops of the emperor Justinian in Africa, vii, 312.
- Strasbourg*, battle of, between Julian and the Alemanni, vi, 223.
- Stratonice*, defends the Roman frontier against the Goths, i, 434.
- Struth*, the origin and removal of, i, 410.
- Struth* appointed and killed by the Romans, xii, 167, 168.
- Struth*, Struth, was the highest impost of the Roman jurisdiction, viii, 23.
- Struth*, origin and impost of this title of eastern sovereignty, v, 335.
- Struth*, Description of the pagoda of, in Gazzer, and its destruction by Sultan Mahomed, v, 377.

See, the worship of, introduced at Rome by the emperor Heliogabalus, i, 232. Was the peculiar object of the devotion of Constantine the Great, before his conversion, iii, 242. And of Julian after his apostasy, iv, 33.

Sava, the city of, taken by Constantine the Great; ii, 229.

Savastianus, east of Ruma, his reign, x, 293.

Saxa cantons, the confederacy of, born far similar to that of the ancient Franks, i, 314.

Saxa of Mars, the sacred weapon of the Huns, history of, vi, 44.

Saxons, king of the Franks and Burgundians, his character, vi, 312. Is conquered by Clovis, 314.

Sylla the dictator, his legislative character, viii, 96.

Syllanus the consul, his speech to the senate, recommending the election of the two Gordians to their apprehension, i, 287.

Synodal, sales of the prefects Rufinus, but unknown in reality, v, 159, note.

Syrannus, general in Gaul under Constantine, is raised by treachery, iii, 190.

Sylvestris, Pope, is degraded and sent into exile by Maximian for an attempt to betray the city of Rome to the Goths, vi, 239. His death, 257, note.

Symmachus, his account of the pagan conformity of the emperor Constantine, during his visit to Rome, iii, 400. Pleads in behalf of the ancient pagan religion of Rome, to the emperor Valentinian, v, 95.

Symachus, bishop of Ptolemais, recommends the president Andronicus, iii, 286. His extraordinary character, See note. His advice to the eastern emperor Arcadius, v, 167.

Synods, provincial, in the primitive churches, institution of, ii, 234. Nature of those assemblies, iii, 203. See Concils.

Syria, its revolutions and extent, i, 39. Is reduced by Chosroes II, king of Persia, viii, 219. General description of, ix, 402. Is conquered by the Saracens, 406. Invasion of, by Tamerlane, xii, 20.

Syriac language, where spoken in the greatest purity, i, 325, note.

Syriacus, duke of Egypt, surprises the city of Alexandria, and expels Athanasius, the prince of Egypt, iii, 373.

T

Tahari, the Arabian historian, account of his work, ix, 302, note.

Tahaur, the island of, in Upper Thebais, is settled with monks, by Pachomius, vi, 215.

Table of emerald, in the Gothic treasury in Spain, account of, v, 287.

Tacitus, emperor, his vices and character, ii, 63.

Tacitus the historian, his character of the principles of the parties, i, 125, note. The intention of his epistles, 313. His character as a historian, 314. His account of the ancient Germans, 332. His history, how preserved and transmitted down to us, ii, 62, note.

- His account of the persecution of the Christians at the solicitation of Rome, 404, 405.
- Taricus* of Leo and Constantine, character of, i, 98. Military character of the Greeks, 140.
- Tarquin*, battle of, between the emperor Nero, and Tullus king of the Goths in Italy, vi, 385.
- Tarshish*, the Sasanian dynasty of, i, 80.
- Tamurlane*, his birth, reign, and conquests, vii, 3. His letter to Bajazet, 17. His conference with the doctors of the law, at Aleppo, 22. Defeats and takes Bajazet prisoner, 25. How kept out of Europe, 27. His triumph at Samarcand, 40. Dies on a march to China, 42. His character, ibid.
- Taurus*, the emperor, his character, xi, 25. His bold behaviour at Constantinople, 31.
- Taurus*, secretary to the emperor Irene, made patriarch of Constantinople, ix, 164. Presides at, and frames the decrees of, the second council of Nice, 165.
- Tarik*, the Arab, his descent on Spain, ix, 472. Defeats and kills Roderic the Gothic king of, 474. His dignities, 480, 486.
- Tarragona*, the city of, almost destroyed by the Franks, i, 415.
- Tartars*. See Scythians.
- Tartary*, eastern, conquest of, by Tamurlane, xii, 9.
- Tatian*, and his son Proculus, destroyed by the base arts of Rufinus, the confidential minister of the emperor Theodosius, v, 141.
- Taurus* the animal, is sacrificed by the tribunal of Chalcedon, iv, 48.
- Taxes*, how the Roman citizens were exempted from the burden of, i, 258. Account of those instituted by Augustus, 261. How raised under Constantine the Great, and his successors, iii, 99.
- Tarsh*, siege of, by Mahomet, ix, 510.
- Tarax*, the last king of the Goths, defeated and killed by the emperor Nero, vi, 384.
- Telmachus*, an Aëtic monk, loses his life at Rome, in an attempt to prevent the combat of the gladiators, v, 206.
- Temple of Jerusalem*, burned, ii, 412. History of the emperor Julian's attempt to restore it, iv, 163.
- Temple*. See Zurich.
- Tiberias* is occupied and fortified by the Paulicans, i, 178.
- Tertullian*, his pious exhortation in the expected damnation of all the pagan world, ii, 507. Suggests devotion to Christian soldiers, 517, note. His expressions against two edicts of Tiberius and Marcus Antoninus in favour of the Christians, 444.
- Tetrasia*, the Roman laws for regulating, viii, 77. Colicth, 80.
- Terra*, assumes the empire in Gaul, at the instigation of Victor, ii, 30. Betrays his legions into the hands of Arminius, 31. Is led in triumph by Arminius, 47.
- Thabor*, mount, dispute concerning the right of, vi, 287.
- Thasos*, the island of, granted by Vespasian, as a settlement for his Syrian auxiliaries, vi, 552.
- Theatrical entertainments* of the Romans described, v, 24.

- Theodosius* begins, the martyrdom of, apocryphal, ii, 463, 464, note.
- Theft*, the Roman laws relating to, vii, 86, 94, 98.
- Theory*, or military governments of the Greek empire, account of, i, 101.
- Theodosius*, the orator, his eucnemium on religious toleration, iv, 231.
- Theodoric*, his birth and elevation to the throne of Italy, vii, 210. His dissensual treaties with the emperor Justinian, and revolt against them, 214. His deposition and death, 222.
- Theodoric*, king of the Franks in Austrasia, joins the Goths in the siege and destruction of Milan, vii, 249. Invades Italy, 251. His death, 252.
- Theodoric*, a Gothic prince of Spain, copy of his treaty of submission to the Saracens, ix, 481.
- Theodora*, empress, her birth, and early history, vii, 64. Her marriage with Justinian, 68. Her tyranny, 71. Her virtues, 72. Her death, 75. Her fortitude during the Nika sedition, 86. Account of her palace and gardens of Hericium, 121. Her pious concern for the conversion of Nubia, viii, 267.
- Theodora*, wife of the Greek emperor Theophilus, her history, ix, 44. Resisted the worship of images, 166. Provokes the Patriarchs to rebellion, i, 178.
- Theodora*, daughter of the Greek emperor Constantine IX, her history, ix, 70.
- Theodora*, widow of Baldwin III, king of Jerusalem, her adventures in the captivity of Andronicus Comnenus, ix, 90.
- Theodorus Angelus*, despot of Epirus, whom Peter of Courtenay, emperor of Constantinople, prisoner, xi, 260. Possesses himself of Thessalonica, 271.
- Theodoric* acquiesces the Gothic scepter by the murder of his brother Torismond, vi, 458. His character by Sidonius, ibid. His expedition into Spain, 461.
- Theodoric*, the son of Alois, his prosperous reign over the Visigoths in Gaul, vi, 98. Unhappy fates of his daughters, 97. He prevailed on by Ælius to join his arms against Attila, 114. Is killed at the battle of Chalons, 117.
- Theodoric* the Ostrogoth, his birth and education, vii, 2. Is forced by his troops into a revolt against the emperor Zeno, 7. He undertakes the conquest of Italy, 11. Reduces and kills Odoacer, 15. Is acknowledged king of Italy, 16. Review of his administration, 17. His visit to Rome, and care of the public buildings, 30. His religion, 36. His revenue, and death, 50.
- Theodosiopolis*, the city of, in Armenia, built, v, 429.
- Theodorus* the Great, his distinction between a Roman prince and a Parthian monarch, iii, 58, note. The province of Media recovered by his valor, iv, 331. Is associated by Gracian as emperor of the East, 422. His birth and character, ibid. His prudent and successful conduct of the Gothic war, 429. Defeats an invasion of the Ostrogoths, 435.
- his treaty with Maximus, v, 221. His baptism and edict to establish orthodox faith, 14. Purges the city of Constantinople from Arianism, 22. Enforces the Nicene doctrine throughout the East, 24. Convenes a council at Constantinople, 26. His edicts against heresy, 31. Receives the fugitive family of Valentinian, and marries his sister Galla, 31. Defeats Maximus, and visits Rome, 33. His character, 35. His loyalty to the city of Antioch, 62. His cruel treatment of Theodosius, 63. Submits to the penance imposed by St. Ambrose, for his severity to Theodosius, 70. Restores Valentinian, 73. Consults John of Lycopolis, the hermit, on the intended war against Eugenius, 79. Defeats Eugenius, 84. His death, 85. Enacted a senatorial renunciation of the pagan religion, 100. Abolishes pagan rites, 103. Prohibits the pagan religion, 116.

Theodosius the Younger, his birth, v, 411. Is said to be left by his father Arcadius, to the care of Isidore king of Persia, 413. His education and character, 416. His marriage with Eudochia, 421. His war with Persia, 426. His pious joy on the death of John, the emperor of the West, vi, 2. His treaty with the Huns, 39. His armies defeated by Attila, 52. Is seduced to accept a peace dictated by Attila, 60. Is oppressed by the embassy of Attila, 65. Embassy of Maximin to Attila, 68. Is privy to a scheme for the assassination of Attila, 81. Attila's embassy to him on that occasion, 82. His death, 84.

— his perplexity at the religious lands between Cyril and Nestorius, vii, 223. Banishes Nestorius, 267.

Theodosius III, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 24.

Theodosius, the father of the emperor, his successful expedition to Britain, ix, 293. Suppresses the revolt of Firmus the Moor, in Africa, 306. Is besieged at Carthage, 308.

Theodosius, patriarch of Alexandria, his competition with Gaius, how decided, viii, 361. His magnificence at the court of Byzantium, 364.

Theodosius, the deacon, grandson of the emperor Heraclius, murdered by his brother Constant II, ix, 14.

Theodosius, the lover of Antonina, detected by Belisarius, vii, 262. Turns monk to escape her, 264. His death, 266.

Theodosius, president of the council of Hierapolis under Constantine, his ridiculous flattery to that emperor, iv, 32.

Theophrastus, wife of the Greek emperor Romanus II, poisons both him and his father, ix, 63. Her connection with Nicephorus Phocas, 65. His murder and her exile, 63, 66.

Theophilus, emperor of Constantinople, ix, 41. His Arabian war with the caliph Marwan, x, 67.

Theophilus, archbishop of Alexandria, destroys the temple of Serapis, and the Alexandrian library, v, 111. Avoids the persecution of St. Chrysostom, 401. His lecture against him, 409, ante.

Theophilus, his pious embassy from the emperor Constantine to the East Indies, iii, 279.

Theophilus, the Persian, his unfortunate history, ix, 13.

Theophrastus, or Eusebius, same account of, ii, 352.

- Thebes*, the walls of, fortified by the emperor Justinian, vi, 27.
- Theodosius*, million and massacre there, v, 64. Cruel treatment of the citizens, 65. Persecute of Theodosius for his excesses, 70.
- Theophilus*, prince of Armenia, married to Ancharis king of the Lombards, vii, 151, 153.
- Thibaut*, count of Champagne, engaged in the fourth crusade, vi, 189.
- Thomas* the Cappadocian, his revolt against the Greek emperor Michael II, and cruel punishment, ix, 40.
- Thomas* of Damascus, his exploits against the Saracens when besieging that city, ix, 392.
- Thomas*, St. account of the Christians of, in India, viii, 346. Persecution of, by the Portuguese, 347.
- There* is embraced by the Huns, in the reign of Probus, ii, 84. The fugitive Goths permitted to settle there by the emperor Valens, ix, 391. Is ravaged by them, 391. The Goths settled there by Theodosius, 428.
- Thrasimund*, king of the Vandals, his character, vi, 251.
- Three Chapters*, the famous dispute concerning, viii, 325.
- Thundering Legion*, the story concerning, of suspicious veracity, ii, 145.
- Tiberius* is adopted by Augustus, i, 119. Reduces the Pannonians, 180. Returns Capricious, 213, note. Suspicious story of his edict in favour of the Christians, ii, 144.
- Tiberius* is invested by Justin II, as his successor in the empire of the East, viii, 125. His character and death, 138, 139.
- Timon*, master general of the army under the emperor Theodosius, is disgraced and killed under Arcadius, v, 381.
- Timothy* the Cat conspires the murder of Proterius archbishop of Alexandria, and murders him, viii, 210.
- Tipsie*, miraculous gift of speech bestowed on the catholics, whose tongues had been cut out there, vi, 203, 204.
- Tiridates*, king of Armenia, his character, and history, v, 128. Is restored to his kingdom by Diocletian, 140. Is expelled by the Persians, 144. Is restored again by treaty between the Romans and Persians, 154. His conversion to Christianity, and death, iii, 137.
- Tiber* admitted to share the imperial dignity with his father, Valerian, i, 110.
- Tigran Beg*, sultan of the Turks, his reign and character, z, 345. He rescues the caliph of Bagdad from his enemies, 349.
- Tiles* taken by the Arabs under Tarik, ix, 275.
- Tolerance*, universal, its happy effects in the Roman empire, i, 46. What sets the most intolerant, 328, note.
- Tollu*, objection to his account of the vision of Antigonus, iii, 282, note.
- Teirismund*, son of Theodoric king of the Visigoths, attempts his father against Attila king of the Huns, vi, 111. Battle of Chalons, 146. Is acknowledged king on the death of his father in the field, 110. Is killed by his brother Theodoric, 128.

- Torture*, how admitted in the criminal law of the Romans under the emperors, iii, 73.
- Totila* is elected king of Italy by the Goths, vii, 256. His justice and moderation, 258. Besieges and takes the city of Rome, 262. Is induced to spare Rome from destruction, at the instance of Belisarius, 263. Takes Rome again, 279. Plunders easily, 277. Battle of Tagina, 282. His death, 287.
- Toulanides*, the Sarracen dynasty of, x, 82.
- Tournaments* preferable exhibition to the Olympic games, xi, 30.
- Tours*, battle of, between Charles Martel and the Saracens, x, 25.
- Transdris*, in Germany, is overrun, and occupied by the Franks, vi, 214.
- Traditors*, in the primitive church, who, ii, 174.
- Travert*, emperor, his conquest of Dacia, i, 8. His conquests in the East, 9. Contrast between the characters of him and Hadrian, 12. His pillar described, 76. Why adopted by the emperor Nero, 123. His instructions to Pliny the Younger for his conduct towards the Christians, ii, 118. Description of his famous bridge over the Danube, vii, 123, note.
- Trajan*, Count, his treacherous murder of Pers king of Armenia, iv, 319.
- Translation*, the doctrine of, when established, xi, 122.
- Trebisond*, the city of, taken and plundered by the Goths, i, 425. The duke of, becomes independent on the Gothic empire, xi, 254. Is yielded to the Turks, xii, 249.
- Triberis* the Ostrogoth, his rebellion in Phrygia against the emperor Arcadius, v, 883.
- Tribune*, the office of, explained, i, 103.
- Tribunian*, his genius and character, viii, 31. Is employed by Justinian to reform the code of Roman laws, 37.
- Trinity*, the mysterious doctrine of, iii, 320. Is violently agitated in the schools of Alexandria, 327. Three systems of, 323. Decisions of the council of Nice concerning, 334. Different forms of the doctrine, 338. Friends used to support the doctrine of, v, 230.
- Triumvirs*, the confederacy of, actually approved under the government of Constantine, iv, 201.
- Trincom*, religious war concerning, viii, 314.
- Troops*, Roman, their discipline, i, 15. When they first received pay, 252. Cause of the difficulty in keeping them, vi, 64. See Legions, Palatins, and Pretorian bands.
- Troy*, the situation of that city, and of the Grecian camp of Achilles, described, iii, 10.
- Turin*, battle of, between Constantine the Great and the Goths, ii, 225.
- Turismud*, king of the Gepids, his honorable reception of Alboin the Lombard, who had slain his son in battle, viii, 117, 118.
- Turks*, their origin, vii, 264. Their primitive institutions, 287. Their conquests, 288. Their alliance with the emperor Justinian, 294. Send auxiliaries to Heraclius, viii, 246.

Tatars grow powerful and victorious under the Saracens, v, 72. Tatars excited by their menacing Europe, 201. Their military character, 208. They extend themselves over Asia, 223. Reign of Mahmud the Gaznavide, 294. Their manners and immigration, 340. They subdue Persia, 344. Dynasty of the Seljukians, ibid. They invade the provinces of the Greek empire, 351. Reformation of the eastern calendar, 366. They conquer Asia Minor, 370.

— Their capital city, Nice, taken by the crusaders, xi, 57. The seat of government removed to Iconium, 104. Valour and conquests of Zenghi, 121. Character of Sultan Nosredin, 122. Conquest of Egypt, 125. Origin and history of the Ottomans, 131. Their first passage into Europe, 198. Their education and discipline, ibid., 54. Embassy from, to the emperor Sigismund, 94. Take the city of Constantinople, 232.

Tarpis, the nurse of, by whom, and when written, vi, 7, note.

Tyber Tables, review of the laws of, viii, 6. Their severity, 90. How the criminal code of, went into disuse, 93.

Tyrants of Rome, the popular concert of the thirty investigated, i, 444.

Tyre is besieged by Saladin, xi, 140.

Tyber assigned to the clergy as well by Zoroaster as by Moses, i, 326, note. Were first granted to the church by Charlemagne, ix, 178.

V

Valerian, prince of the Acemanni, is sent prisoner to Spain by the emperor Julian, iv, 18. His son murdered by the Romans, 294.

Valens, general of the Illyrian frontier, receives the title of Cæsar from Licinius, ii, 247. Loses his new title and his life, 249.

Valens, the brother of the emperor Valentinian, is associated with him in the empire, iv, 242. Obtains from his brother the eastern portion of the empire, 242. His timidity on the revolt of Procopius, 248. His character, 255, 256. Is baptized by Eudoxus, and patronizes the Arians, 265. Is vindicated from the charge of persecution, 267. His exertions against the Egyptian monks, 271. His war with the Goths, 323. Receives the suppliant Goths into the Roman territories, 331. His war with them, 334. Is defeated and killed at the battle of Hadrianople, 408, 410. His eulogium by Libanius, 411.

Valens, the Arian bishop of Mursa, his crafty pretension to divine revelation, ii, 351.

Valentia, a new province in Britain, settled by Theodosius, iv, 300.

Valentinian I. his election to the empire, and character, iv, 230. Associates his brother Valens with him, 240. Divides the empire into the East and West, and retains the latter, 242. His cruelty, 256. His civil institutions, 259. His efforts to restrain the avarice of the clergy, 270. Conquers the Alemanni, and fortifies the Rhine, 282, 283. His expedition to Illyricum, and death, 287. Is vindicated from the charge of polygamy, 334.

Valentinian II is invested with the imperial ornaments in his mother's arms, on the death of his father, iv, 396. Is refused by St. Ambrose the privilege of a church for him and his mother Laelia, on account of their Arian principles, v, 10. His flight from the invasion of Maximus, 18. Is restored by the emperor Theodosius, 73. His character, 74. His death, 76.

Valentinian III is established emperor of the West, by his cousin Theodorus the Younger, vi, 6. Is committed to the guardianship of his mother Placidia, 8. Flees, on the invasion of Italy by Attila, 180. Sends an embassy to Attila to purchase his retreat, 181. Murders the patrician Avitus, 190. Ravishes the wife of Petronius Maximus, 140. His death, and character, 141.

Valentinians, their confused ideas of the divinity of Jesus Christ, viii, 270, note.

Valeria, empress, widow of Galerius, the unfortunate sister of her and her mother, ii, 240.

Valerian is elected emperor under the emperor Tacitus, i, 108. His elevation to the empire, and his character, 110. Is defeated and taken prisoner by Sapor king of Persia, 136. His treatment, 141. His inconsistent behaviour toward the Christians, ii, 475.

Vandalæ. See Goths.

— their successes in Spain, vi, 12. Their expedition into Africa under Genseric, 14. They raise a naval force and invade Italy, 147. Sack of Rome, 151. Their naval expeditions on the coasts of the Mediterranean, 187. Their conversion to the Christian religion, 271. Persecution of the catholics, 280.

— expedition of Belisarius against Genseric, vii, 167. Conquest of, 180. Their name and disposition lost in Africa, 190. Remains of their nation still found in Germany, 198.

Vasani. See Isabellæ.

Vasungians of the North, origin and history of, x, 221.

Varronian, the infant son of the emperor Jovian, his history, iv, 224.

Vasari, John, his long and prosperous reign of Nov, xi, 271, 282. His character, 302.

Vasari, his remarks on the discipline of the Roman discipline at the time of Theodosius the Great, v, 83.

Vat, the siege of that city, the eve of the Roman army first receiving regular pay, i, 253.

Vat, foundation of that republic, vi, 133. In subjection under the empire of Augustus, viii, 146. Its growth and prosperity at the time of the fourth crusade, xi, 191. Alliance with France, 194. Divides the Greek empire with the French, 243.

Vat, his mode of obeying the law of the twelve tables respecting personal freedom, viii, 89.

Vat, emperor, the widow of Leo, deposes Zenon, vii, 5. The Italian life, 6.

Vat, life of, by Constantine the Great, ii, 296. Battle of, between Stilicho the Roman general, and Alaric the Goth, v, 203.

Vat, why his punishment was inadequate to his offence, vii, 56.

Vat, his punishment in sharing the imperial dignity with his son, vii, 112.

- Varro*, Roman, their number and peculiar office, v, 33.
- Vesulius*, the Roman general in Illyria, assumes the purple, and forms him an alliance with the Gothic usurper Magnus, iii, 150. Is reduced to abdicate his new dignity, 155.
- Vindex* exercises the government over the legions and province of Gaul, ii, 30.
- Victory*, her statue and altar, in the senate-house at Rome, described, v, 25. The same petitions the Christian emperors to have it restored, 96.
- Vigilius*, the presbyter, is closed by Jerome for opposing monkish superstition, v, 126, note.
- Vigilius*, interpreter to the embassy from Theodorus the Younger to Attila, is party to a scheme for the assassination of Attila, vi, 68. Is detected by Attila, 81.
- Vigilius* purchases the papal chair of Heliarius and his wife, 230.
- Indigates the emperor Justinian to evict the Goths from Italy, 578.
- Vine*, its progress, from the time of Homer, i, 85.
- Virgil*, his fourth eclogue interpreted into a prophecy of the coming of the Messiah, iii, 270. Is the most ancient writer who mentions the manufacture of silk, vii, 91.
- Volant*, the Gothic chief, is treacherously murdered at Constantinople, vii, 38.
- Volturnus*, pretorian prefect under the emperor Maximian, put to death by order of the senate, i, 236.
- Votilas*, emperor, his character, i, 123.
- Vulpi*, general of the barbarians under Theodatus king of Italy, is by his troops declared king of Italy, vii, 222. He besieges Bellacris in Rome, 244. Is forced to raise the siege, 245. He is besieged by Belisarius in Ravenna, 253. Is taken prisoner in Ravenna, 257. Confirms to the Athenians faith, and is humanely settled in Asia, 258. His embassy to Chosroes king of Persia, 262.
- Vulturnus*, the architect, his remarks on the buildings of Rome, v, 267.
- Vulva*, derivation of that appellation, ix, 284, note.
- Walden*, description of that country, i, 306.
- Wald*, king of the Huns, reduces and kills Gainas the Goth, v, 397. Is driven back by the vigilance of the imperial ministers, 415.
- Widius*, the spouse of the Goths, his pious labours, vi, 269. Propagated Avismam, 278.
- Wigorn*, the lawyer, placed at the head of the council of state, under the emperor Alexander Severus, i, 213. Is murdered by the pretorian guards, 219.
- Widius* has abolished the right of female subsistence, viii, 76. How evaded, 82.
- Widius* presents the labarum of Constantine to the angel of Licinius, iii, 251, note. His reflections on the experience of a siege, v, 416, note.
- Widius*, king of South Britain, his invitation of the emperor for assistance against his enemies, vi, 351.
- Wong*, emperor of China, his exploits against the Huns, vii, 364.
- Wool*, anciently famous for its Gothic temple, i, 380.
- Urban II*, Pope, patronises Peter the hermit in the project for re-

- covering the holy land, xi, 3. Exhorts the people to a crusade, at the council of Clermont, 10.
- Urban V.* Pope, removes the papal court from Avignon to Rome, xii, 363.
- Urban VI.* Pope, his disputed election, xii, 368.
- Verucius*, master of the collect under the emperor Valentinian, occasions a revolt of the Alemanni by his parsimony, iv, 277.
- Vesontinus*, a Roman general, his treacherous conduct to Sabinus in Gaul, iii, 191. Is superseded in his command over the eastern provinces, 211. Is sent back again to conduct the war with Persia under Sabinian, ibid. Is again disgraced, 212.
- Urini*, history of the Roman family of, xii, 320.
- Ursinus*, treasurer of the empire under Constantine, unjustly put to death, by the tribunal of Chalcodon, ix, 48.
- Usury.* See Interest of money.

W

- Walabianse*, the present descendants from the Norman settlers in ancient Dacia, ii, 30, note.
- Wales* is settled by British refugees from Saxon tyranny, xi, 338, 392. The bards of, 396.
- Wallis* is chosen king of the Goths, v, 353. He reduces the barbarous invaders of Spain, 357. Is settled in Aquitaine, 358.
- War and robbery*, their difference, ix, 234. Evolutions and military exercise of the Greeks, 141. Military character of the Saracens, 144. Of the Franks and Latins, 147.
- Warburton*, bishop of Gloucester, his literary character, iv, 104, note. His labours to establish the miraculous intercession of Julian's building the temple of Jerusalem, 106, 107, note.
- Waras*, battle of, between the sultan Amurath II. and Ladislaus king of Hungary and Poland, xii, 161.
- Warian*, the Greek general, defeated by the Saracens at Alexandria, ix, 298.
- Wine*, the average price of, under the successors of Constantine the Great, ix, 146, note.
- Whitaker*, Mr. remarks on his account of the Irish descent of the Scottish nation, iv, 296, note.
- White*, Mr. Arabic professor at Oxford, character of his sermons at Humphrey's lectures, x, 221, note.
- Wifred*, the squire of Suzev, his benevolent establishment at Schey, vi, 326.
- William I.* the Bad, king of Sicily, x, 324.
- William II.* the Good, king of Sicily, x, 326.
- Windmills*, the use of, from whence derived, xi, 292.
- Wine*, the use of, expressly prohibited by Mahomet, ix, 276.
- Wisdom* of Solomon, when, and by whom that book was written, iii, 210.
- Wladislaw*, great prince of Russia, marries Anne, daughter of the emperor Romanus, x, 125. His conversion to Christianity, 221.
- Women*, in hereditary immarriage, allowed to exercise no dignity, though incapable of subordinate state of coo, i, 205. - Not treated by the Roman civil law, viii, 57. The Voconian law, how extended, 82. Are not excluded from paradise by Mahomet, ix, 281.

X

Xenophon, his description of the desert of Mesopotamia, ix, 163.

Xerxes, the situation of his bridge of boats for passing over to Europe, pointed out, iii, 9.

Y

Yersek, battle of, between the Greeks and the Saracens, ix, 403.

Yezdegerd, king of Persia, his reign the era of the fall of the Sassanian dynasty, and of the religion of Zoroaster, ix, 303.

Yezid, caliph of the Saracens, ix, 342.

Z

Zabergon invades the eastern empire with an army of Bulgarians, vii, 402. Is repulsed by Belisarius, 403.

Zachary, Pope, pronounces the deposition of Childeric king of France, and the appointment of Pepin to succeed him, ix, 152.

Zano, brother of Gelimor the Vandal usurper, conquers Sardinia, vii, 181. Is recalled to assist his brother, 182. Is killed, 184.

Zante, a city on the Scheyonian coast, induced by the emperors for the republic of Venice, xi, 200.

Zeydi, Saliz, his valour and conquests, xi, 121.

Zoss, emperor of the East, receives a surrender of the imperial government of the western empire, from the senate of Rome, vi, 227.

The circumstances of his life and reign, vii, 4. His Henoticon, viii, 211.

Zosima, queen of Palmyra, her character and history, ii, 32.

Zuza, first emperor of the Moguls and Tartars, wrestled between him and Amila, king of the Huns, vi, 12. His proposal for improving his conquests in China, 54. His birth and early military exploits, xi, 402. His laws, 404. His invasion of China, 408. Caracore, Transoxiana, and Persia, 410. His death, 413.

Zozai, a noble Sarmatian, is made king of that nation by the emperor Constantius, iii, 200.

Zubeir, the Saracen, his bravery in the invasion of Africa, ix, 451.

Zoe, first the concubine, becomes the fourth wife of the emperor Leo the philosopher, ix, 57.

Zoe, wife of Constant III and Michael IV, emperors, ix, 70.

Zoroaster, the Persian prophet, his high antiquity, i, 519, note. Abridgement of his theology, 320, 321. Provides for the encouragement of agriculture, 324. Assigns oxen to the priests, 325, note.

Zoroaster, his representation of the oppression of the Israel contribution, iii, 94.

Zwinglius, the reformer, his conception of the Eucharist, x, 183.

Zurich, the situation of that city, iii, 273.

CATALOGUED

CATALOGUED.

~~XXX~~

"A book that is shut is but a block"

CENTRAL ARCHAEOLOGICAL LIBRARY

GOVT. OF INDIA
Department of Archaeology
NEW DELHI.

Please help us to keep the book clean and moving.